Frey Urges Law to Bar Union Cash In Campaigns

AFL Official Witness At Inquiry on Labor Board; Calls Lewis Fund 'Unfortunate'

By John E. Oakes
Post Staff Writer
Edwin S. Smith, NLRB member, sent a department store executive information about a proposed union boycott against a hosiery mill before the union had filed any charges with the board, the House committee investigating the labor act was told late yesterday.

However, Smith declared last night that the "implication" that he tried to persuade the store to institute a boycott against the mill "is completely untrue."

Roger Robb, former Assistant District Attorney here, took the witness stand as associate general counsel of the committee to relate how he had discovered in Smith's files at the Labor Board correspondence on the union boycott against the Berkshire Knitting Mills, of Reading, Pa., during a 1936 strike.

The files revealed, said Robb, that Smith had transmitted material on the boycott to Louis Kirstein, head of Filene's, large Boston store with which Smith at one time was connected. The information had been sent to Smith by John Edelman, a hosiery union official, Robb said.

Charge Not Yet Filed
"Was there any charge filed by the union with the National Labor Relations Board at that time?" queried Edmund M. Toland, chief counsel for the committee.

"No, sir," replied Robb. He added that the files "indicated" that Smith and other Labor Board officials had conferred with the union attorney as to "the form and content" of charges eventually filed against the mill.

"My letters to Mr. Kirstein on the subject of the Berkshire company do not suggest a boycott and I am sure Mr. Kirstein did not so construe them," Smith declared. "I am, of course, available whenever the committee wishes to give me a chance to reply to this totally unfounded charge."

There was disagreement between Robb and Charles Fahy, NLRB counsel, as to whether the union was then a C. I. O. or A. F. L. affiliate.

Earlier in a rather hectic day, the committee heard John P. Frey, head of the metal trades division of the A. F. L., urge that international unions be forbidden by Federal law to contribute to political campaigns.

Bitterness 'Unfortunate'
Bitterness between the A. F. L. and the C. I. O. was brought out for the hundredth time during the hearings when Frey snapped that "there is nothing more unfortunate at the present time" than that John L. Lewis has "widely advertised the fact that the $500,000 he is now securing through 32 assessments from union members is to be used for political purposes next year."

"That sum is enormously larger than any which corporations have contributed to political parties in the past when we were told they were undermining the structure of free political institutions," Frey steamed. The veteran A. F. L. leader, who commenced his testimony with a history of craft unionism that took him back to the days of King Solomon, lashed out at the Labor Board as well as the C. I. O.

He declared his conviction that the NLRB had tended to "set up a governmentally determined form of organization for labor rather than a free form of organization." The board, he added, has "violated the very provisions of the law that labor should have the right to choose

Envoys Trade Nods Like Ice At White House

Invaders, Invaded Are Represented at Annual Reception

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Diplomacy apparently came through with flying colors last night when envoys from 53 nations—several at war, some in danger of being swallowed up, and at least one no longer on the map—gathered at the White House for the annual diplomatic reception given by President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

But beneath a seemingly smooth surface the entire political plight of Europe could be pieced together by noting frigid nods, stiff bows, and the clever device more than one envoy employed of ignoring entirely diplomats from countries unfriendly to his own.

Brilliant but tension-shot from first to last was the reception, which officially opened the White House social season. Centering the spotlight were the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar Procope; the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; the Russian Ambassador, Constantin Oumansky, and the German Charge

U. S. Inquiring Into Drop in Cotton Price

Sudden Rise and Fall Starts Duvel on Trip to New York

By Felix Cotten,
Post Staff Writer

A special inquiry into the recent advance in cotton prices and yesterday's sudden drop was launched yesterday by the Commodity Exchange Administration, which is charged with the policing of commodity markets to prevent price manipulation.

J. W. T. Duvel, chief of the CEA, left last night for New York to conduct the investigation, already started by the New York office.

Duvel said he would attempt to find out if the recent behavior of cotton futures was due in any part to a particular trading situation. He explained, meanwhile, that he had no evidence that manipulation was a contributing factor.

Futures Off at 10.94 Cents

Today is the last day for dealing in December futures, which closed off at 10.94 cents yesterday after rising to 11.56 cents Wednesday. The latter figure represented an advance of 2.69 cents since November 1.

Duvel pointed out that the price in Liverpool rose the full allowable limit of 25 points yesterday and then dropped the full allowable limit of 25 points under the previous day's close—a decline of 50 points from the day's high.

The break on domestic markets followed, Duvel, however, wanted to ascertain if there were any other factors in the situation besides the reaction occasioned by the decline in the Liverpool price.

Corner Attempt Suspected

It was believed that an effort may have been made to corner the market for free cotton, or that a situation had occurred similar to that which developed in the case of March, 1939, futures.

At that time, an unusually heavy long interest developed due to the fact that a number of traders rode along with another trader who had been buying futures. Then they discovered that the trader they had been following had sold out. The

Garner Chicks Run if Called; He'll Do the Same, He Says

By the Associated Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Dec. 14.—John N. Garner finds a perfect parallel between Washington and the banam chickens in his own backyard.

Reg Manning, cartoonist for the Arizona Republic, returned from Uvalde, Tex., with this account of a visit with the Vice President:

It was the first meeting of the two, but without preliminaries Manning was taken directly to the chicken yard. There Garner "let out a peculiar yell—a short wail like a taxpayer working out his income tax return—and diminutive fowls flocked in from every direction."

$15,000,000, Record Pay, Flows Today

U. S. and Private Wages Expected To Bring District's Heaviest Spending

Payroll gold — $15,000,000 worth of it—will flow in Washington today.

The biggest single payroll in the country and the fattest in District history will spread an estimated $11,500,000 through Federal offices this morning, a half month's salary for more than 126,000 employees of the Government's executive branch.

With Federal employment rolls at an all-time peak for Washington, District merchants expect the last Government pay day before Christmas to signal the heaviest holiday spending the city has ever known.

Private Firms to Pay Off

Mingling with the green Treasury checks in circulation today will be $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 in wages paid out by private firms, according to the estimate of local businessmen.

The District Unemployment Compensation Board collected taxes on more than $17,000,000 in non-Government salaries in September, last month for which figures are available.

Swelling of retail sales forces for Christmas shopping and other seasonal trends will bring the December pay roll well above the September figure. At least a fifth of the December total is expected to be disbursed today.

District Contributions

The District Government will pump approximately $750,000 into the city's purchasing power. Another $750,000 will go to men and women on local WPA projects.

The $11,500,000 estimate for the Federal pay roll is based on the Civil Service Commission's report of last Saturday, which reveals a total of $22,552,372 paid out in the District in October to employees of the executive branch.

In 1938 the pay roll jumped more than $500,000 between October and December. A similar increase this year would bring the total for this month over $23,000,000, with half that amount paid out today.

Treasury Plays Santa

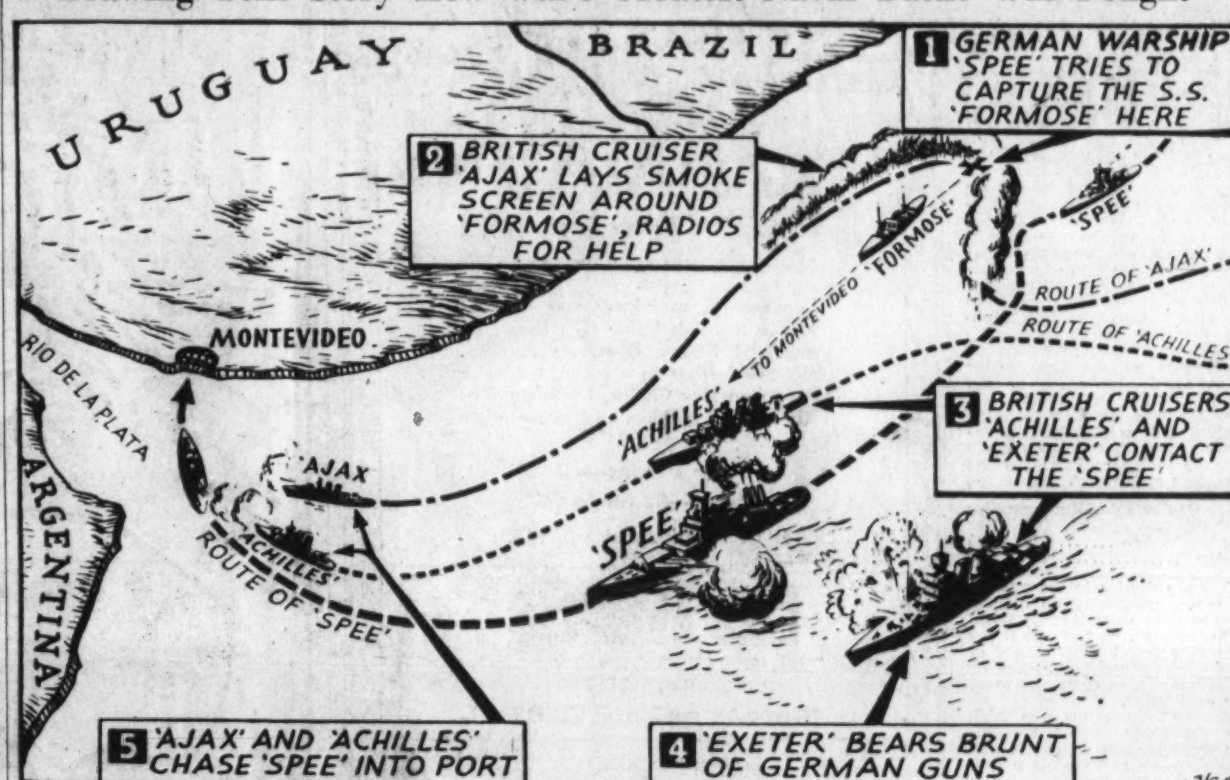

The Treasury Department yesterday played Santa Claus to some dozen taxpayers by making refunds, credits and abatements of more than $1,000,000 on income tax levies.

Chief of the beneficiaries were William H. Donner, of Philadelphia, former father-in-law of Elliott Roosevelt, who received a refund of $229,894 on his 1933 taxes; George D. Warr, of Oklahoma City, awarded a $237,928 abatement on his 1934-35 taxes, and R. Carl Larkins, of the same city, allowed an abatement of $240,738 for the same years.

Other rebates, credits and allowances included: Blanche B. Rosett, New York, $52,899 refund on 1924-25-36 taxes; Charles S. Munson, New York, $21,602 refund on 1935 tax; estate of Edward J. Myer, Lake View, New York, $30,078 refund and $3,061 abatement on estate taxes; Alice R. Hind, Honolulu, executor for John Hind, refund of $84,580 on 1930 income tax; Atlas Powder Co., Wilmington, Del., $35,233 rebate and $6,975 credit on 1929 tax; MacDonald & Kahn, San Francisco, $23,551 abatement and $1,402 refund on 1937 income, excess profits and undistributed profits taxes, and Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga., $44,794 refund on 1931 income tax.

Reinforcements Gather

Montevideo, Dec. 14.—The battle buffeted pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee began hasty preparations tonight to repair its damage with its own crew and put to sea again, while a reinforced cordon of British warships maintained a "death watch" outside this neutral port.

Port workers started a boycott movement against anyone who undertook to repair the shattered German craft.

The Uruguayan government this afternoon granted permission for the warship to remain in port here until it completes essential repairs, the time necessary to be decided by a board of Uruguayan naval officers.

As soon as this permission was granted the German warship began taking aboard oxygen tanks for welding, as well as heavy plates and other metals.

The Uruguayan Foreign Minister Alberto Guani stated tonight that the government has granted permission to the Graf Spee to remain in the port of Montevideo beyond the customary 24 hours established by international law.

In accordance with section 7 of the Uruguayan neutrality law, Uruguay has decided the Graf Spee may remain here for the time necessary to repair the damages affecting the seaworthiness of the vessel.

British Seamen Freed

The British were taking no chances of losing the quarry they forced into the neutral harbor following yesterday's big naval engagement of the war off the Uruguayan coast.

The Admiral Graf Spee surrendered to British authorities 62 British seamen captured from nine merchantmen in her weeks of raiding. The British cruisers Achilles and Ajax, which ran down the Nazi ship, hovered close by and British diplomatic sources in Montevideo indicated the 10,000-ton cruiser Cumberland had been added to the "death watch." They hinted that the battle cruisers Renown and aircraft carrier Ark Royal might speed there from Capetown, South Africa, where they are hunting for another German raider, the Admiral Scheer.

It was also indicated in London dispatches that British men of war were combing the North Atlantic in an effort to trap the Nazi pocket battleship Deutschland.

Official Argentine sources said they "understood" that the 26,500-ton French battleship Dunkerque was steaming toward the River Plate to join the British watch over

Spee Prisoners Tell of Waiting Victory, Death

Locked Under Turret, British Cheered as Own Shells Struck

By the Associated Press

Montevideo, Uruguay, Dec. 14.—Vivid stories of the Admiral Graf Spee's fight with British cruisers were told tonight by members of a group of 62 British seamen who were prisoners directly under one of the 11-inch gun turrets while the Graf Spee threw steel at her attackers.

One of the best accounts of the first big sea fight of the European war was told by a quiet-mannered officer of the British steamer Doric Star, who was taken prisoner before his ship was sunk by the Graf Spee off the coast of Africa.

The prisoners were awakened at 6 in the morning, he said, by cannonading.

"We knew what that sound meant," he said, "and we knew it was serious when the guards of our quarters locked and barred the

Finns Quit Sector On Norway Border

League Expels Russia, Organizes Group to Speed Aid for Finns

By the Associated Press

Geneva, Dec. 14.—Russia, which in years past used the League of Nations as a forum for speeches against "aggression" in Spain and Czechoslovakia, was thrown out of that council today for having waged unprovoked war on Finland.

Seven out of the 14 members of the League Council voted to expel the U. S. S. R. after the Assembly had condemned the Soviets as an aggressor and had urged all League members to give Finland all possible material help. Four—Finland, China, Yugoslavia and Greece, abstained. Three were absent.

It was the League's first expulsion of a member.

Tonight a telegram informing Russia of the action was sent to the Kremlin.

Mine-Frontier River And Nickel Works As Russians Advance

By the Associated Press

Kirkenes, Norway (at the Finnish frontier), Dec. 14.—Norwegians mined the frozen Pasvik (Pacific) River as a precautionary defense measure tonight as Russian troops, invading the Finnish nickel mining district just across the frontier river, neared the burning town of Salmijarvi.

The Finns, in their withdrawal from this sector, left behind a countryside aflame with burning towns and habitations.

Small Finnish detachments remained behind to dynamite the rich nickel mines around Salmijarvi tonight, when the Russians are expected to arrive. Salmijarvi is close to the Norwegian border, about 32 miles southwest of the Finnish Arctic port of Linnamari.

Some of the mining properties belong to the International Nickel Co., of Canada.

Violent Explosions Heard

Dispatches from the Finnish border said two violent explosions were heard at 9 p. m. (2 p. m. E. S. T.) at the Salmijarvi. The presumption was that the Finns had blown up the nickel mines.

Finnish troops were withdrawing in good order, most of them in lorries. It could not be learned where they were planning to check the Russian advance.

As long as they follow the Arctic highway, the Russians have the advantage of fairly level terrain for about 80 miles southwest to Toornanen but the Finns are far more familiar with the region.

There was no information as to

German Fleet In North Sea, Airmen Report

British Fliers See Large Force in Jutland Area

Bulletin

London (Friday), Dec. 15 (P).—British airmen just returned from a smashing air battle over the North Sea reported today they had seen a section of the German fleet near the scene of the World War battle of Jutland.

"Reconnaissance fliers said they saw a Nazi battleship, a cruiser, some destroyers and a submarine," the air ministry announced.

It was the first report in the European war of such a strong penetration of the North Sea by German naval forces.

The warships took part in a German counter-attack on the British planes.

London, Dec. 14.—The Helgoland Bight area was the scene this afternoon of one of the fiercest air battles of the war as a reconnoitering squadron of British heavy bombers clashed with German Messerschmidt fighters.

The British air ministry said four of the Messerschmidt planes were brought down and admitted the loss of three British planes. In contrast, the Germans claim that eight enemy planes were shot down, and that "one German chaser (pursuit plane) made a forced landing in the sea."

The fight is a manifestation of the increasing British air activity throughout the North Sea area.

The British communiqué concerning this afternoon's battle speaks of "intense fighting" which developed. The German radio announcement referred to the engagement as "a big

German Yawl Prohibited From Leaving U. S. Waters

By the Associated Press

Wilmington, N. C., Dec. 14.—The United States today forbade the German-manned yawl Lakala to leave the Nation's jurisdiction because of the vessel was preparing to carry supplies or information to a German ship at sea.

Papers served on the captain and crew of the 10-foot yawl said the action was taken because "the United States finds reasonable cause to believe that said vessel, Lakala, is about to carry fuel, arms, ammunition, supplies, dispatches or information to some warship, tender or ship of a foreign belligerent nation, to wit: Germany, in violation of the neutrality laws of the United States."

Edward Kerling, captain of the vessel, said tonight he planned to continue tomorrow morning a voyage to Miami, Fla.—a trip interrupted 10 days ago when the Coast Guard detained the Lakala, tied her up at Wrightsville Sound and awaited instructions from Washington.

The order served today on Kerling and his crew by John Bright Hill, collector of customs, notified the sailors that if they "take or attempt to take or authorize the taking" of the Lakala "from the jurisdiction of the United States, (they) shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both; in addition, such vessel and her cargo shall be forfeited to the United States."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

THIRD TERM CLUE: Privately, the White House kitchen cabinet confesses itself as much in the dark as anyone else about President Roosevelt's intentions.

Sometimes in moments of candor, occasionally in unguarded hints, they reveal he hasn't given them a sign.

MINES OFF NEW YORK? Crux of our State Department's deep concern about the naval battle off Uruguay is: Was the Admiral Graf Spee ambushing a French freighter inside the Americas' 300-mile safety zone when the British caught her?

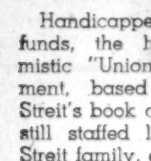

If she was, gradually that might lead to a close-in German blockade of New York harbor to catch outbound freighters and, by gradual evolution, even to German mining of American harbor approaches.

Hence the sharp interest at the State Dept.—and across the street at the White House.

With Hitler's "Mein Kampf" now exhausted as a source-book for Nazi policy, some officials at the State Department are now studying with equal care "The Revolution of Nihilism," by Hermann Rauschning, former president of the Danzig Senate and once a Nazi leader.

Rauschning warns that the Nazis are out for world conquest. Even Senators are reading the book. Before long, who knows, Representatives may indulge in that rare spree, reading a book.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: Many of the Capital's liberals, sometimes called parlor pinks, now hold their noses when the wind blows from Moscow, and favor recalling our Ambassador . . . At a recent cocktail party a Washington wit encountered two ladies about whose important husbands he had recently said things . . . One cut him cold and the other invited him to tea.

Handicapped by lack of funds, the heretically optimistic "Union Now" movement, based on Clarence Streit's book of that name, is still staffed largely by the Streit family, a zealous quartet of devotees reminiscent of an early Christian cult.

While Streit himself tours the country speaking and organizing "Union Now" clubs, his Washington office force consists of his sister, his brother Tom and Tom's wife.

It's a valiant little group dedicated to the colossal task of binding 15 democracies into a nucleus for a world state. But they keep acquiring disciples whose skepticism struggles half apologetically with their idealism.

Half the officials you encounter in the Capital keep worrying a little about the destiny of our huge gold hoard. The basic fear is that we'll be stuck with it when other countries get rid of all their gold at our high price and the yellow metal becomes unfashionable as the Dutch uncle of all modern money.

XMAS GOLD: Some eminent experts argue that the safest place for gold is not in a Kentucky fort, but in the socks of American hoarders. That is the historic French view.

I was beguiled to hear a dignified monetary expert assert the nostalgic view of John Citizen—that every American should have a few gold pieces to put in children's stockings at Xmas.

Those who have heard the President think out loud the last few days suspect that he was slightly flabbergasted by the word "defeatist" slung in his direction by Tom Dewey in his very clever Minneapolis speech.

Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that he was astonished that anyone, even a militant, youthful adversary, could think of using "defeatist" about the New Deal and its helmsman; that it would even occur to him.

Coming from young Dewey and aimed at the leader of the "bloodless revolution" of the 1930's, it almost—but not quite—took his breath away.

Other members of the Dies committee are concerned about the health of their Chairman Martin Dies.

Off the record they say his condition is so serious that between speeches and hearings he has been kept at home much of the time under doctor's orders.

His recovery from an operation early this year has been incomplete, and he has had to nurse the remnants of his old-time vigor for his speeches.

The Gallup Poll

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 12.—Recent criticisms of the Dies investigation by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and other New Dealers have caused sentiment for continuing the Dies Committee to decline slightly, but a large majority of voters still want to see the investigation go on. These facts are revealed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

At the present time, 75 per cent of those who have an opinion about the investigation think the Dies Committee should be continued. The issue put to the voters was: "Should Congress provide money to continue the Dies Committee another year?" Representative Martin Dies, of Texas, is seeking an appropriation, when Congress convenes in January, to extend the investigations into 1940.

The Institute has on two previous occasions sounded the public's attitude toward the Dies Committee. A year ago 74 per cent of voters with views on the subject favored continuing the committee. Six weeks ago 79 per cent with opinions on the investigation were in favor of continuation. In this study it was found that when voters were divided into three groups—those in favor of continuing, and those who had not heard or read of the committee or had no opinion—the group favoring continuation formed a majority, or 53 per cent, of all voters.

The latter study had just been completed when President Roosevelt criticized the committee, describing as a "sordid procedure" its publication of the League for Peace and Democracy, an alleged "front" for the Communist Party. The Institute announced at the time that it would conduct another survey to test the public's reaction to the criticisms by the President and others.

Continue the Dies committee
Six Weeks Ago . . . . . 79% 21%
Today . . . . . 75 25

A sharp decline in the number of voters expressing no opinion on the Dies committee is noted in the surveys. A year ago 41 per cent said they had not heard or read of the committee or had no opinion on it, as compared to 28 per cent today.

Among those voters who think the committee should continue the chief reasons given are that "people need to have their eyes opened to things that are going on in this country," that the Nation should "get at the bottom of un-American activities especially with war going on abroad," and that "we should put the fear of God into the Communists."

Voters who want to see the committee discontinued declare that it "hasn't accomplished anything," that the "basic idea is good but the committee has bungled the job," or that its tactics are "un-American."

Especially interesting is the division of sentiment by political parties. A large majority of Republican voters (79 per cent) with opinions in the survey say the committee should be continued. And despite opposition of certain New Deal leaders to the Dies group, sentiment among the rank and file of Democratic voters is also strongly (72 per cent) in favor of continuing the investigation.

In order to determine whether voters who oppose continuing the committee are against the whole idea of the investigation or are merely dissatisfied with the way the Dies group has conducted it,

Glass Act Prevented Monopolies, Says Banker Who Fought It; SEC Differs

Charles E. Mitchell, former head of the National City Bank and now a Wall Street investment banker, yesterday agreed that Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, was right in providing for divestment of the deposit banking and underwriting business in the 1933 banking act.

The controversy between Mitchell and Glass over fundamental banking questions was one of the highlights of the time when the 1933 act was under consideration in Congress. The divestment idea was originally suggested by the Federal Reserve Board.

If the system of security affiliates of banks had been allowed to continue, Mitchell told the Monopoly Committee, the result would have been a monopolistic condition in the investment banking field.

He felt that forced separation of deposit and investment banking was a "disaster" at the time, but he now looks upon it as "one of the great steps" in the path of progress.

Mitchell, a little grayer than when he testified in the Senate stock market and other inquiries, but still robust looking and ruddy-complexioned, was on the witness stand all day in the investment banking hearing conducted by counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission.

He was subjected to vigorous questioning by Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust cases, as to whether "reciprocal obligations" which the SEC holds investment bankers observe in sharing participations in security flotations did not constitute "a combination in restraint of trade."

Mitchell replied that this was not the case.

Arnold expressed the belief that, if participations in security flotations were shared reciprocally by banks to such an extent that allotments would work out even at the end of the year, it would be "pretty clear evidence of a monopoly."

His interest in this line of questioning indicated that the Justice Department might scrutinize data brought out in the inquiry to ascertain whether ground existed for an antitrust case against investment bankers.

Mitchell, however, assured him that the whole idea of reciprocity was merely a "tail end thought" in the sharing of participations in syn-dicates handling security issues, and that it did not work out in any such literal fashion as Arnold had suggested.

"If it were a front-end thought," Arnold declared, "it would clearly be a monopoly, would it not?"

"O, yes," Mitchell replied.

Golden Relics From Jungle Brought Here

Costa Rican Graves

W. Baron van Haersolte van den Doorn, from one of Holland's oldest houses, and Baron Walram V. von Schoeler, of the Villa Sereno, Fiesole, Italia, are up from the jungle with an armload of pre-Columbian golden relics to make any girl's eyes flash.

But the two barons—Van den Doorn coldly serious; Von Schoeler, gay, snappily dressed, playful—aren't thinking of girls, but museums, and of the great gamble it all is. That's the one factor in the business that makes the face of Van den Doorn take the look of a man about to buy a sweepstakes ticket.

With fingers that should be on an artist, Van den Doorn produces first his letters of introduction; then his photographs of himself in some murderous-looking jungle. It was from there that the glittering gold things came from graves bedded down before Columbus came and before the Spaniards came to interrupt the culture in Costa Rica.

Armed With Rifle, Salt

It is difficult, he said, to get permission to do that kind of work. It is then more difficult to find the right cemeteries. But he goes into the woods, or the jungles, with a rifle and some salt. He shoots his food and fuses with the hired native help.

Talks of "Find"

"You may open a thousand graves—and find nothing. Only some bits of pottery that are valueless." But the baron's expression was working up to something as his talk raced through archeological technicalities revolving around strata of earth and working tools and the formations of graves that might hold the dust of some once venerated chieftain.

And then his words came to the "find" and his face was like a man whose sweepstakes ticket had hit. His hand swept out to the bed, covered with the glitter—some large pieces, some intricately small—and seizing a golden eagle, he held it up. "I found a beautiful golden eagle once in the grave of a monkey," he said excitedly. "That's what gives me the fever of it; you say . . . the fascination . . . You will dig a thousand times and find nothing. . . then . . . his hand flashed up another ornament that some pre-Columbian had laid a dream and some delicate carving in.

Von Schoeler was on the phone, talking about the evening. And then he signed for the cocktails.

Barons Display Pre-Columbian Relics

$50,000,000 Black Tom Award Is Invalid, Court Told

By James D. Secrest

Post Staff Writer

The recent $50,000,000 award in the Black Tom-Kingsland munitions blast case has "no more validity than a piece of paper," Joseph H. Proskauer, former New York Supreme Court justice, contended yesterday in United States District Court.

Making a plea for an injunction to block the disbursement of $28,000,000 in German funds by the Treasury, Proskauer, counsel for the Zimmerman & Forshay Assets Realization Corporation, New York, declared the German-American Mixed Claims Commission acted illegally.

A three-hour argument to persuade Justice Jennings Bailey to uphold the awards of Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts was made yesterday by William De Witt Mitchell, former Attorney General, formally retired in a cutaway.

While a score of lawyers listened attentively as spectators, the court heard the once sensational case reviewed at length. There were only passing references to the charges that German spies had a hand in the 1917 blast.

With a record of 22 years of investigation and international bickering behind it, the Black Tom case appeared to be nearing its denouement in a final legalistic bout.

The argument will continue today without the United States making an appearance except to file a brief. The suit is designed to enjoin the Secretaries of State and the Treasury.

Mitchell, who represented the United States before the commission, appeared in opposition to the suit for the Lehigh Valley Railroad and other large interests to which the claims commission awarded a substantial share.

He challenged the jurisdiction of the court in the dispute and charged that Germany had tried to "frustrate" the findings of the commission by withdrawing its agent when it became apparent the decision would go against the Reich.

Proskauer, while disclaiming any intention of defending Germany, said that the German member of the commission withdrew because he held the commission had no authority to reopen the case once it had reached a decision.

The commission, he recalled, dismissed the claims of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and the Canadian Car & Foundry Co. in 1930, after failing to find evidence of German sabotage.

Subsequently, "after the personnel had changed," he said, the case was reopened on a petition claiming new evidence. The commission, he added, "not only granted the motion but actually decided the case within 15 minutes."

Mitchell took the position that the United States could have made the Black Tom awards from impounded German funds without permission of the German government. Instead, he said, the United States entered into an agreement to establish the Mixed Claims Commission "as a matter of international good will."

Germany recovered millions of dollars as a result of the agreement, he said, and consequently had no right to attempt to "frustrate" the later awards.

The arrangement was between two sovereign governments, Mitchell added, and thus is outside the jurisdiction of the court. The United States, he said, has no legal obligation to disburse the awards to the claimants.

Justice Bailey raised the question of whether a private citizen has a right to challenge the awards and whether the suit should not have been brought by Germany.

Mitchell brought out that the Z. & F. Assets Corporation had been awarded $864,050 in 1930, or more than the principal of its claim, but he admitted the award had not included interest.

Lehigh got the largest single award, or $9,900,322, under Justice Roberts' recent decree. Canada Car & Foundry was given $5,871,105, and Bethlehem Steel $1,886,491. As the Government has only about half of the $50,000,000 awarded, however, the claimants would receive proportionate amounts.

Stephen Early Confirms FCA Shift Study

Wallace Represented As Feeling That He Should Have Control

Stephen T. Early, White House secretary, yesterday confirmed reports published exclusively in The Post earlier yesterday that President Roosevelt has under consideration giving the Secretary of Agriculture complete control of the Farm Credit Administration.

The FCA, nominally shifted to the department by the governmental reorganization act, has retained what amounts to independent status although it reports to the President through Secretary Wallace.

"The Secretary," Early said, "very naturally takes the position that if he is going to be responsible for it, he ought to have control of it."

Grange Opposes Action

Protests against the anticipated order abolishing the $5,000,000,000 agency's autonomy were registered yesterday by several organizations doing business with it.

Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange, said at the meeting of the New York State Grange in Syracuse, N. Y., yesterday: "The National Grange believes that the action of the President and the Secretary of Agriculture looking toward abolishing the independent status of the Farm Credit Administration and absorbing it into the Department of Agriculture is not only a backward step but one very injurious to rural life."

"Under the wise order of President Roosevelt in 1933 consolidating the Farm Credit Administration and making it an independent agency it has grown to be the best and strongest institution of its kind in all the world."

"Sound cooperative credit must be free from either political interference on the one hand or production control programs on the other."

"Secretaries of Agriculture change with each changing Administration, yet the farmers' credit needs must go on regardless of what political party is in power. The Grange will be compelled to urge Congress to restore the independent status of the Farm Credit Administration on the interests of economy, efficiency and good government."

"We shall ask for administration by an independent board, like the Federal Reserve System, with the terms of members staggered so that changing political authority may not wreck an institution affecting the life blood of agriculture."

Fred Breckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, said his organization was strongly opposed to abolition of the independent status of the FCA. "It would be little short of a crime to make this agency a happy hunting ground for political job holders, besides injecting politics into its work," he added.

Opposed by Md. Grange

Opposition was voiced yesterday in a resolution by the Maryland State Grange at the conclusion of a three-day convention at the University of Maryland.

In Los Angeles, Hub Russell, president of the National Livestock Association, commented: "I would prefer to have FCA administered by an independent body. If it were transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, I would be fearful that its administration would become involved in the many unsuccessful attempts of the Secretary of Agriculture to remedy the agricultural situation, resulting in unsound agricultural credit."

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, reported from Chicago that at his organization's national convention last week, a resolution was passed noting that the "present cooperative system of rural credit... has been built up... in an endeavor to attain and preserve a fair, effective, sound, permanent and independent farm credit system. This achievement must not be compromised in any manner."

In another resolution, however, it was recommended consideration be given the advisability of modifying existing laws "to provide for placing the full administrative responsibility of all lines of cooperative farm credit and all types of agricultural commodity programs under the direction of two independent boards operating within or properly correlated with the Department of Agriculture."

Japan Weighs World Front Against Soviet

By Hugh Byas.

Copyright by New York Times. Tokyo, Dec. 14.—The possibility of a world-wide anti-Soviet front being formed is creeping into the background of Japanese political thought.

Those who have opposed the plan for an entente between the Soviet Union, Germany and Japan—a proposal now pretty generally dismissed as "crackpot diplomacy"—see in such a development the possibility of a new alignment wherein Japan might effect a reconciliation with the United States and Great Britain.

An editorial in the Tokyo Asahi today takes cognizance of rising anti-Soviet feeling throughout the world. Surveying the trend of American and European public opinion, the Asahi concludes that the situation has not yet developed to the stage where an anti-Russian front could be formed.

The Japanese are prone to scoff at the League's helplessness in the Russo-Finnish dispute, the Asahi points out, but it should not be forgotten that the actions of the League reflect the Anglo-French attitude towards Russia.

Seeking an explanation of America's "curious quietness," the Asahi suggests that Washington is awaiting Geneva's decision, but thinks it more probable that the United States lacks the determination to take a definite stand.

Latin-America's vigorous anti-Sovietism, the Asahi declares, is due to the fact that it is geographically distant, while at the same time it doubts the Anglo-French willingness to enforce an economic blockade of Russia in view of the general European situation.

Department of Agriculture," O'Neal said.

It was learned, however, that the Farm Bureau's rural credit committee had drafted a much more strongly worded resolution for maintaining FCA independence, which was "tuned down" before it reached the floor.

At that time, Herbert P. King, president of the New York farm bureau, launched a debate in the convention by asserting he would not vote for the resolution unless it unequivocally favored independence of FCA. He was assured that was the resolution's meaning.

"We shall ask for administration by an independent board, like the Federal Reserve System, with the terms of members staggered so that changing political authority may not wreck an institution affecting the life blood of agriculture."

Fred Breckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, said his organization was strongly opposed to abolition of the independent status of the FCA. "It would be little short of a crime to make this agency a happy hunting ground for political job holders, besides injecting politics into its work," he added.

Nazis Test Front South Of Saar Cities

Patrols Press on Sector Where French Made Opening Drive

By G. H. Archambault
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Dec. 14.—In the last 24 hours German patrols have been active along a vital portion of the Rhine-Moselle front. There have been sharp actions between scouting groups.

The importance of the actions in the region in which they occurred. The French communiqué issued this morning described it as "the whole of the central portion of the Rhine-Moselle front," while the evening communiqué mentioned specifically the lower Vosges Mountains and the Biles River.

This means a line of approximately 25 miles east of the Saar River, south of three of the most important industrial centers of the Saarland—Saarbrücken, Zweibrücken and Pirmasens.

From the opening of hostilities to Gen. Gamelin's strategic withdrawal early in October this section was constantly active with the French steadily pressing toward Saarbrücken.

The text of the French communiqué follows:

"Patrol activity in the whole of the central portion of the Rhine-Moselle front. Sharp engagements between scouting parties in the Vosges and on the Biles."

Joan Girardoux, French commissioner of information, told the American Club of Paris today that "France is making war for her life."

"Germany has forced her to do this before," he said, "but each time France has had to meet a Germany more brutal, less civilized and less humane. If France should yield it would have to accept the fear of moral misery—the type of life which the German now lives."

Then, answering those who have asked why France wasn't fighting a blitzkrieg, (lightning war) Girardoux replied:

"France and Great Britain are fighting for Europe as well as for themselves, but not for the benefit of spectators. We do not intend to sacrifice one more life than is necessary and are keeping our reserves intact for desperate or decisive moments."

Girardoux added that France expected some day to make peace with Germany, but it would have to be with a pacific Germany. When that day comes he said, France will consider her aim accomplished.

'Many Propagandas' Declared No Menace

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 14 (AP).—Don't worry about the "many propagandas" but the time when only one propaganda is present, Rotarians and Kiwanians were told today.

For then "it will be a manifestation of dictatorship," declared Dr. Clyde E. Miller, head of the Institute of Propaganda Analysis, New York. He pointed to the "monopoly of propaganda" in dictator nations—Germany, Russia, Italy, and Japan, and urged that Americans analyze propaganda with which the country is "being bombarded from without and within."

He addressed a joint meeting of the service clubs, and spoke tonight at the community forum.

League of Nations Expels Russia

marking Russia an aggressor. They were the Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden and Denmark; three Baltic countries, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia; Switzerland, China and Bulgaria.

But in spite of abstentions, everyone but Russia seemed to be pleased. Latin-American delegates enjoyed prestige because they took the initiative in the matter.

Great Britain, which throughout the debate never appeared enthusiastic about expelling Russia, nevertheless was for helping the Finns and believed the action would please neutrals, particularly the United States.

The Finns were delighted "so far," but pointed out that material help was more important to them than league resolutions.

European neutrals were pleased, although most of them were too frightened to back the league ouster themselves and warily made it clear they were entering no "block" against anyone.

German observers and German newsmen even were satisfied, they said, "for Russia will work with us now, perhaps."

Italians, too, liked it, although they still have not forgiven the league for imposing economic sanctions against them at the time of the 1935 invasion of Ethiopia.

Disagreeable features of the action however, were noted unofficially in League quarters, where it was remembered that Russia has been contributing about $500,000, or about 11 per cent, of the annual League budget.

The Council's action left the League with the task of setting up a clearing house to see that League members furnish plenty of munitions to Finland.

The Assembly resolution empowered the League's staff of technical experts to coordinate efforts to help the little League member.

Before the Assembly voted, the League was informed by Britain's representative, R. A. Butler, under-secretary for foreign affairs, that his government would give "the best assistance in their power to Finland," despite heavy war burdens.

(Prime Minister Chamberlain announced in the House of Commons that "in addition to air supplies to Finland the government intend similarly to release other materials that will be of assistance to the Finnish government.")

Men May Be Sent

France also promised to give "all the help we can up to the limit of our own defenses." The French were reported to be considering proposals to organize an international brigade similar to that which fought for the republicans in Spain.

France would be a main source for such volunteers, since she has large numbers of Czech and Polish soldiers on her soil.

The Scandinavian states have not promised any help publicly, but it is through Scandinavia that help will have to move to Finland.

In addressing the council, Joseph Paul Boncour, French delegate, said that "perhaps the league is waking up a little late" and declared "Russia's violation is connected with all past aggression."

Butler, the British delegate, made it clear Britain did not propose to be diverted by the Russian case from her war with Germany.

16 Who Played for Rulers Here Came From Now-Shelled Exeter

Ship's Band Arrived to Honor Monarchs During Affair at British Embassy Were Widely Entertained in Baltimore

The 16 blue and white-uniformed musicians of the Royal Marine Band who thundered "God Save the King" to King George and Queen Elizabeth in the garden of the British Embassy here last June 8, came from the now battered H. M. S. Exeter.

The Exeter, crippled in the running fight that sent the German pocket battleship Graf Spee into refuge in Montevideo Harbor, was dispatched to Baltimore from its West Indies station last June to honor the visiting monarchs.

On June 8, its band came to Washington for the garden party—highlight of the royal visit. The music was in an environment where an ultra-distinguished guest list had been compiled.

The next morning, June 9, the band, under white helmets, appeared again at the embassy, then to play for the King, who received British war veterans. "Troops" was played; then "God Save the King," and the cheering of the veterans could be heard far along Massachusetts avenue.

The Exeter, flagship of the British South Atlantic Division, went to Baltimore from Bermuda and fired a 21-gun salute off Fort Howard, at dusk of June 6. A committee extended greetings; the British consul recruited Baltimore soccer and cricket teams to engage the visitors. The ship was thrown open to the public and Baltimore entertained lavishly.

The officers were invited by Ambassador and Lady Lindsay to the embassy to meet the King and Queen. The seamen were taken on tours of Washington, Philadelphia, Annapolis and historic sites hereabouts. The British Embassy arranged a cricket game with the Washington Cricket Club at Silver Spring.

The ship cast off from Baltimore on June 10 to return to its southern station.

British Speed Heavy Warships In Search for Admiral Scheer

By Robert Bunnelle.
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 14.—Great Britain's admiralty poured mighty men-of-war into a redoubled hunt tonight for the two German pocket battleships still at sea and counted out the troublesome raider Admiral Graf Spee, lying crippled in Montevideo harbor.

Authoritative sources disclosed the battle cruiser Renown, mounting six 15-inch guns and twelve 4-inch guns and displacing around 37,000 tons fully loaded, and the 22,000-ton aircraft carrier Ark Royal, have reached waters near Capetown to hunt the raiding German pocket battleship Admiral Scheer.

The Renown is one of the few British warships deemed capable of "catching and killing" a German pocket battleship single handed. Her speed is 29 knots.

Patrols of British men-of-war also were keeping a wary eye upon the North Atlantic in the hope of catching the Nazi pocket battleship Deutschland, in spite of the handicap of short daylight.

Raiding activities by the Admiral Scheer have been reported off South Africa. Naval sources, however, said the three pocket battleships, with identical specifications, had changed names frequently and that it was hard to distinguish between them.

The elation of British public, officials and press over "bottling up" of the Graf Spee overshadowed the loss of 130 men aboard the 1,375-ton British destroyer Duchess, which was sunk yesterday in a collision with another and unidentified warship. One officer and 22 men were saved.

The 202-ton British minesweeper William Hallett struck a mine today and sank with the loss of all but one of her crew of nine.

The 7,400-ton British tanker San Alberto was damaged "by enemy action" off the southwest English coast.

The loss of life aboard the Duchess was outranked only by the 708 men killed aboard the sunken battleship Royal Oak at Scapa Flow, the 578 lost when the aircraft carrier Courageous was sunk and the 285 killed in the sinking of the armed merchantman Rawalpindi.

Prime Minister Chamberlain, speaking in the House of Commons, called the feat of the 4-inch-gun cruisers Achilles and Ajax in driving the Graf Spee to shelter a "gallant action," especially since the feat was accomplished after the more powerful cruiser Exeter had been forced out of action.

The prime minister listed total British casualties for the first three months of war as 2,411, as compared with 12,500 for the first two months of the World War. Unofficially, British naval casualties so far were placed at 1,994, and air force, 427. There has been no separate listing of land dead.

Roosevelt Studies Super Tax for Arms

Levy Designed To Avoid Disruption Of Revenue Structure

By Cecil B. Dickson.

Democratic Congressional leaders yesterday disclosed President Roosevelt is considering proposing a 20 percent surtax to raise $500,000,000 for national defense purposes.

The proposal is based on a principle Mr. Roosevelt employed as Governor of New York to raise taxes for relief purposes. It is designed to avoid any disruption of the Federal revenue structure through a simple method of application.

As explained by Democratic chiefs, who have been called to the White House for conferences with the President, it merely provides for a special levy on the total of income taxes both individuals and corporations will pay.

Rates ranging from 5 to 25 percent have been discussed. However, on a basis of $2,500,000,000 total income tax collections, a 20 percent surtax would produce the extra $500,000,000.

$20 for Every $100 of Taxes

In its simplified form the proposed defense levy would be applied thusly: If an individual, under present income-tax levies, should be required to pay $100, a 20 percent levy would be added to that total, to make the full payment $120.

If a corporation, under existing corporate taxes, should have to pay $1,000, the 20 percent levy would increase the total to $1,200.

Individuals and corporations paying $1,000,000 under present law, would have to add $200,000 each.

Argument advanced for the levy by the President, according to his party leaders, is that it would be simple to obtain enactment at the coming session of Congress, and would avert any overhauling of the present tax structure.

It was also pointed out that should the income tax estimates, as a result of increased business in 1939, be increased to $3,000,000,000 for the coming fiscal year, a 15 percent super-tax would produce $450,000,000, nearly the amount the President considers necessary to be raised.

To Decide in 2 Weeks

Mr. Roosevelt informed the Democratic conferees he would make a definite decision within two weeks on whether to propose the additional levy. At the same time, they said, he made it plain that he would put the proposition of increasing the national debt limit to $50,000,000,000 squarely up to Congress at the January session.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, appearing before a House appropriations subcommittee, was quoted by members yesterday as saying the $45,000,000,000 debt limit could be safely increased to $50,000,000,000 without injuring the credit of the Government.

With the public debt now at $42,000,000,000, and heavy outlays anticipated that will push it near the limit by the end of the fiscal year next July 1, Morgenthau informed the committee that it was a matter for Congress to decide.

Morgenthau, without making any specific recommendations, said increased taxes and slashes in expenditures would be necessary to avert increasing the public debt.

Polish Diplomat Slain, Says Vatican

Copyright by New York Times.

Vatican City, Dec. 14.—Vatican authorities claim to have confirmation of the assassination at Rome, in Russian-occupied Poland, of Prince Humbert Lubinski, former attaché in the Polish Embassy to the Holy See. He is supposed to have been killed in the presence of his wife and children.

The same fate has overtaken Henry Skirmunt and his sister, brother and sister of Polish Ambassador Skirmunt at their castle of Molodow, where the family had founded a convent of Ursuline Sisters. These two were said to have been "barbarously killed."

Count Michael Krasinski also was counted as assassinated.

Frey Calls for Law to Forbid Union Campaign Donations

Edwin Smith Advised Store of Boycott, Labor Hearing Told

Says Board Hurt Labor.

Frey said that the NLRB has "lent its powerful influence in assisting those who believed in the industrial form of labor organization to over-come those who believe in a free form."

The witness declared that the NLRB had "injured the cause of labor and collective bargaining as much as any agency that is anti-labor," and that "the great majority of board representatives are 'wholly unqualified.'"

"It is almost impossible to find anyone on the board with a practical knowledge except in the field of law," he said. However, he stated he thought the Wagner act was "soundly conceived."

In discussing contributions of labor organizations to political campaigns, Frey observed that "nothing could be more destructive to the welfare of labor and the free operation of the democratic form of government than to allow national federations of labor to collect funds to be used for partisan political purposes."

He added that "one of the most unfortunate things" was "the contribution of over $600,000 by John L. Lewis and his organization to the Democratic campaign fund in 1936. Frey denounced Lewis' subsequent 'reproach' to President Roosevelt 'for failing to meet his obligation.'"

Two Women Testify

The appearance of two women as witnesses enlivened the hearing yesterday, and brought some disagreement between committee members and counsel as to the relevancy of their testimony.

Miss Mary Moore, comely blond NLRB employee who was stationed in Washington for a time, identified letters through which Toland attempted to show that the employees' union in the Labor Board was "company-dominated."

After Representative Healy (Democrat, of Massachusetts), had raised the question of relevancy, Toland informed the committee that "here we have a situation where the union records disclose that card stationery was used, meetings were held in working hours, and at the same time the board finds these acts violate the law when they are done by other employers. The whole question is whether the board is conducting a company union."

Asked About Closed Shop

"Does it have a closed shop?" injected Smith with a chuckle. The chairman added, as the audience giggled, "Is there any check-off?"

One of the Moore letters was addressed to A. George Koplow, a board employee in Washington and a union officer. It said: "Are you bolstering yourself these days with orange blossoms? You'll need a couple (couple of hundred) if you really become treasurer of the glorified 'company union.' I admit that I transact union business on 'company time'—do with me as you will."

The other feminine witness was Miss Carol King, a New York attorney and secretary of the International Juridical Association. Toland brought out that one of the organization's founders was Joseph Brodsky, New York lawyer who was Earl Browder's attorney when the Communist leader appeared before the Dies Committee recently.

'Lepke' Trial Witness 'Duped'

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 14.—A 43-year-old police record came out of the past today to confront a witness-defendant in the trial of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter and others on charges of conspiring to violate narcotics laws in the operation of an alleged $10,000,000 international syndicate.

Max Schmuckler, 57-year-old partially paralyzed former bootlegger, who testified in his own behalf, declared he had been "duped" into taking $8,200 to France in the summer of 1935 to David Diahbach, also under indictment in the case but a fugitive.

Yasha Katzenberg gave him the money, Schmuckler said, with instructions to give it to a man who would contact a doctor in Paris to treat the ailment responsible for Schmuckler's leg paralysis.

Instead, Schmuckler continued, he met Diahbach and another man. He refused to give the money to Diahbach, he declared, when he discovered it was to be used to purchase narcotics.

"They threatened me and I gave Dave $200," he testified. The remainder he said he returned to Katzenberg.

Under cross-examination by United States Attorney John T. Cahill, Schmuckler admitted he had been arrested for narcotic violations and vagrancy and had once been sentenced to Elmira reformatory on a burglary charge 43 years ago, and that he had been a bootlegger from 1921 to 1928.

Earlier Federal Judge John C. Knox refused a defense motion to dismiss the indictment against "Lepke," David Kardonick and Schmuckler, but reserved decision until tomorrow on a similar motion for the fourth defendant, Morris Sweeder.

Defeat of Nazis Still Goal, Says Chamberlain

Sympathy for Finns Shouldn't Distract From First Aim, House Told

By Raymond Daniell

Copyright by New York Times

London, Dec. 14.—Declaring that Britain would give what help she could spare to Finland, Prime Minister Chamberlain warned the House of Commons today that sympathy for that country must not be allowed to deflect from the primary objective of defeating Nazi Germany.

The prime minister sounded his warning in one of his weekly reviews of the progress of the war, delivered as Parliament recessed for the Christmas holidays. Chamberlain spoke proudly of the share the British troops are taking in defending the Allied positions in France, of the gallantry of the crews of the Ajax, Achilles and Exeter in driving the Admiral Graf Spee from the South Atlantic and of the vast contribution the dominions and colonies are making to the empire's war effort.

The most important part of the prime minister's speech, however, dealt with the Russian attack on Finland and the problems of British policy it raised. His words made it clear that Britain's intervention will be limited to help that can be given without embroilment with the Soviet.

In the fortnight of fighting between the defenders of Finland and the Red army, Chamberlain said the defending forces have proved themselves "by far the greater fighting force in everything but numbers."

The prime minister said the German government had lined up on the side of the aggressor and had attempted to "assist by an insolent and violent campaign against the other Scandinavian countries for their moral support of the Finnish cause."

Reviewing the events which had taken place in Geneva, culminating tonight in the vote for expulsion of the Soviet, Chamberlain said the British government "have always held the view that no member state ought to remain indifferent to a clear case of aggression of the sort with which we are now faced."

At the same time he pointed out that more than a year ago it was agreed that each member should decide for itself on the nature of the sanctions which it would impose under the covenant against an aggressor state.

The prime minister's statement was read in the House of Lords by Lord Stanhope.

7 Prizes Offered High Students For Traffic Safety Posters

3-Month Scholarships to Art Academy And Chance at National Recognition Awaits Winners for Original Themes

Here's something new—a contest with seven first prizes and a chance for national recognition to the winners!

Beginning today, The Washington Post, in cooperation with the Art Students Academy, 900 Albee Building, will sponsor a traffic safety poster contest open to all students in eight local high schools.

The competition is designed to create interest in the District's relentless battle against highway evils and has been sanctioned by the Board of Education. The rules are simple and any high school boy or girl who ever held a paint brush or drawing pencil is eligible.

It is the aim of The Post and Art Students Academy to discover a new and original traffic safety poster which might be adopted for safety promotion work throughout the country.

The contest closes January 22. One winner from each high school will be selected for a $70, three-month scholarship to the academy.

Each scholarship is worth $60. Text books, valued at $10 and necessary for the academy course also are included in the award.

All posters should be submitted to the Art Students Academy or to Howard F. Wentworth, traffic writer of The Post, who will head a board of judges.

Here are the rules:

The poster theme must be traffic safety.

Posters must not exceed 15x20 inches in size. They may be drawn either in color or black and white.

The general idea of each poster must be built around one of the following slogans: "Live and Let Live," "Streets Are Not Safe Playgrounds," "Let's We Regret," "Stay Alive," "Don't Get Hurt" and "Learn to Live."

Winners may select any of the following courses at the academy: Advertising art and design, fashion illustration, poster design, commercial and story illustration, animated cartooning or cartooning.

The winning posters will be displayed in the window of Muth's Art Supply Store on downtown Thirteenth street.

Students in the following high schools are eligible: McKinley, Eastern, Western, Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, Anacostia, Central and Gonzaga.

The deadline is January 22.

The Duchess carried a normal complement of 145, but one officer and 24 men, two of whom were in a hospital, were not aboard when the collision occurred. The admiralty communique said all aboard the Duchess were believed lost.

Vatican City, Dec. 14.—Gen. Francisco Franco has commuted the death sentences of two Basque priests to 30 years' imprisonment, it was said here today. They are Leon Aranguren Antioles, of the monastery of Amorebieta, and Father Francis Errasti Albisu, of Baracaldo.

It was also learned that 90 Basque priests are being kept in Carmona prison in Andalusia. All German and English missionaries belonging to mobilized classes have been recalled to their respective countries. Vatican circles are especially anxious about Kenya and Rhodesia.

Stick to Facts On Trade Pacts, Wallace Asks

Tells Farmers Uproar
On Argentine Accord
Has Doubtful Basis

By the Associated Press
St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 14.—Secretary Wallace told Farmers Union members tonight that the reciprocal trade agreement program, as a whole, benefited American agriculture before the European war, but that now the world trade picture is "drastically changed."

"As long as the war is in progress the area in which the reciprocal trade agreement program can effectively operate in Europe is sharply limited," Wallace said.

Because the United States was determined not to become involved in the European war, Wallace said, "we have chosen to turn our eyes inward to the New World" and build up trade in this hemisphere.

Wallace said that in this connection a proposed trade agreement with Argentina had "frightened some of our farm people" who feared the United States would be flooded with Argentine beef, flax, poultry and dairy products.

The agriculture department head said that because he did not know what concessions, if any, would be made in the agreement, it was "entirely premature for me to comment on the negotiations."

"But," he said, "I wish to raise the question whether all the shouting over this particular issue is justified."

Central High Failed to Fit Him for Life's Demands, Graduate Writes in Condemning School Curriculum

A graduate's indictment of District schools for failing to equip him for a place in the world of practicality was cited yesterday as a guide to proposed revision in the public school curriculum.

Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools and leader in the drive for revising the educational program, quoted the letter from a Central High graduate at meetings of the Teachers Institute of Washington in the Dunbar High School and McKinley High School.

Dr. Holmes presented the former student's criticism while outlining the need for reconstructing the curriculum and describing present plans of school officials for an investigation into the District's public education program.

While warning against "sugar coating" education, Dr. Holmes said a primary aim of curricular revision is to make the student's transition from grade to grade, and from one school level to another, "easy and pleasant, with no waste motion in picking up the threads of the program in the new situation."

Besides an investigation by five committees of teachers and school officials now being started, Dr. Holmes said that plans are being studied for exchanging teachers between the elementary, junior high and high school levels for periods of a semester or a year, and also for establishing a department of guidance in the public schools.

Dr. Holmes advised the teachers the proposed revisions would require them to keep their minds "open, receptive and actually enthusiastic about attacking a definitely challenging problem." Specific reforms under study, he said, include changed classroom techniques, greater use of teaching aids such as films and radio, more attention to student guidance, increased use of cumulative records, and establishment of standards for promotion.

Meeting Needs an Objective

He said "College preparation ought to be but one phase of high school instruction and a comparatively small one at that."

"Perhaps the greatest single contribution which our high schools can make to this program of reconstruction of the curriculum is the setting up of more courses which will meet the present and future needs of the students."

As illustration, he quoted the letter from a former Central High School student, written six years after graduation:

"I want to know," the letter said, "why you and your teachers did not tell and teach me about life and the hard, critically practical world into which you sent me... Why did you have to spend so much time on dry, uninteresting subject-matter and so little on genuine life problems?"

The writer told how he had gone to college for a year, left school in the depression, married, landed on relief, and finally:

"I am a husband and a father, working my way blindly from a high school intellectual to a respectable, self-supporting voting citizen of the community. In this transition I am beginning to get an upper hand on the lower rung of the ladder of life for which your education never prepared me a whit."

The writer outlined what he thought his school training should have included:

"I wish I had been taught more about family relationships, child care, getting along with people, interpreting the news, news writing, paying off a small mortgage, household mechanics, politics, local government, the chemistry of food, carpentry, how to budget and live within the budget, the value of insurance, how to figure interest when borrowing money and paying it back in installments, how to enjoy opera over the radio, how to detect shoddy goods, how to distinguish a political demagogue from a statesman, how to grow a garden, how to paint a house, how to get a job, how to be vigorous and healthy, how to be interesting to others, how to be popular, how to be thrifty, how to resist high pressure salesmanship, how to buy economically and intelligently, and the danger of buying on the installment plan."

Schools Aware of Facts

Dr. Holmes told the teachers that the new philosophy of education which his committee has drawn up as a guide to curricular revision showed that the schools are aware of the urgent needs outlined in the letter.

"The difficulty comes in translating such a philosophy into action," he said.

"The end is not even in sight, but with five large committees ready to make the opening attack, and many other committees yet to be appointed, the beginning is already here," Holmes declared.

"We have a golden opportunity to do a splendid piece of educational surgery in joining or articulating the present loose joints so that a solid, substantial, defensible program of studies will result, based on sound principles of learning. We can make this program what we want and need, if we will."

"I DON'T TAKE
TO ANYBODY!"

"I'm as good as the next fellow and I always look as good."

"But I don't spend a fortune on clothes any more; not since I got the low down on Wonder Factory Prices."

"They make all the clothes they sell and that cuts out the Middleman. I bank the savings and have the swell-est lot of clothes I've had for years. Just yesterday I bought a Wonder Tuxedo so I'm all set for the holidays."

Garner to Run In 1940, Says Campaign Head

To Reveal Willingness To Accept Nomination 'At the Proper Time'

her pointed again to his chickens. They run if he calls them. "If I am called, I will run," Manning quoted him.

By the United Press

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 14.—E. B. Germany, co-chairman of the Garner-for-President committee, tonight in a Nation-wide radio broadcast said Vice President Garner "will be a candidate and will, at the proper time, make known his willingness to accept the nomination for President."

Germany said his organization planned to gain the nomination on a "movement springing from the rank and file of American democracy."

The 71-year-old Vice President now is at his home in Uvalde, Tex. "John Nance Garner is the man of the hour," said Germany. "In his vivid personality, in his wide experience, in his broad knowledge, in his rugged honesty, in his fearless courage, in his human simplicity, in his abiding love of the country, he continues all the qualities and qualifications which the times demand for the high office of the President of the United States."

Germany said the Vice President had not actively entered the race for the Democratic nomination because it was his political philosophy that no man should seek to obtain the Presidency of the United States.

"We have proceeded from the first on the sound and natural assumption that Mr. Roosevelt will not be a candidate for a third term."

"Mr. Garner has differed with his own Democratic Administration, and with the President himself, on some questions," Germany said. "He is opposed, for example, to the unnecessary and wasteful public spending, believing, as he does, that the Government of the United States is the biggest business in the world, and that no business can expect to survive if it continues to spend more than it takes in."

"The Garner campaign is not being conducted on a platform of disputed issues. The Democratic platform will be written at the national convention next year. . . . We hope and believe that platform will be an American platform. . . . That it will call us back to the faith of the fathers who founded this republic."

N. Y. Claimed for Garner

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 14 (AP).—The majority of New York State Democrats are against a third term for President Roosevelt and the delegation to the national convention will cast at least 40 of their 44 votes for Vice President Garner, William J. Goodwin claimed today. Goodwin, chairman of the New York State Garner-for-President committee, was in Dallas to report to the national organization on the campaign work being done in New York. He was accompanied by Tom Ruddy, son of Stephen Ruddy, Tammany leader.

Comptroller Brown's Condition Unchanged

The condition of Comptroller General Fred H. Brown remained unchanged yesterday at Casualty Hospital, where he was taken Wednesday after suffering a stroke of apoplexy.

Drs. Wallace M. Yater and O. Hugh Fulcher, attending physicians, said "certain favorable features are still present" but it probably will be several days before the outcome can be forecast.

German Liner Columbus Dashes to Outwit Blockade

Luxury Ship, Provisioned for 50-Day Voyage, Slips Out of Vera Cruz; Papers Name Oslo as Destination

By the Associated Press

Vera Cruz, Mexico, Dec. 14.—The German liner Columbus, fueled and provisioned for a 50-day voyage, slipped out to sea today, apparently attempting to dodge British warships and run the Allied blockade to Germany.

A rich war prize if captured at sea, the 3,581-ton liner had been in Vera Cruz since September 4, the day after Britain declared war. Efforts to keep her departure secret were made because of British warships patrolling Gulf and Caribbean waters. The Columbus received clearing papers for Oslo, Norway yesterday. Before dawn she shifted her anchorage, and by 10 a. m. was outside Mexican waters.

There was some conjecture that she might head first for Tampico, Havana or some United States port, but it was believed generally that she would try to reach Germany. In addition, there were talk the vessel might be used to provision German submarines or other craft at sea. The Columbus had taken on more than 20,000 barrels of fuel oil in the past week. A few hours earlier, the German freighter Arauca, 4,333 tons, cleared Vera Cruz with a cargo of nitrates, crude oil, fiber and other commodities consigned to New Orleans. Departure of the two ships left only one German vessel, the 4,174-ton Hamelin, of the number.

ous Nazi ships which took refuge in Vera Cruz when war started. A usually well-informed source in Buenos Aires reported that all German merchantmen caught in neutral ports had been ordered to try to get home and that the German navy was planning a convoy system to guard against Allied raiders.

U. S.-Japanese Trade Discussed At Town Hall

The importance of trade between Japan and the United States was stressed last night in a report by Katsumi Ohno, Third Secretary of the Japanese Embassy. His report was read by Rubin Borasky before the Town Hall Association Group at the Jewish Community Center. Borasky pointed out that the ideas were those of Ohno, and not the Embassy.

Declaring that Japan's purchases in the United States are annually equivalent to those of the ten South American republics, Ohno's report stated that "in 1938 Japan bought one-tenth of the world exports of the United States."

Chinese Push Offensive in 3 Provinces

Reported Attacking Strategic Town in Southern Hupeh

By Victor Keen.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Shanghai, Dec. 14.—Chinese troops started an offensive in Hupeh, Hunan and Kiangsi provinces December 12, according to Chinese dispatches from Chungking received here today. The reports said Chinese forces attacked the suburbs of Tungcheng, strategic town in southern Hupeh near the Hunan-Hupeh border, and the next morning stormed the walled city.

Chinese troops which were reported to have occupied Tungyang, 30 miles northeast of Tungcheng, are pushing south toward Tungcheng while units from Pingliang, in northern Hunan, are advancing north toward Tungcheng. Chinese troops in northern Kiangsi were reported to have crossed the Ching River and to be advancing north and east.

Other Chinese troops southeast of Nanchang, capital of Kiangsi Province, were reported to have attacked Japanese positions on the Yangtze River at Hsiangshui. The same day Chinese units in central Hupeh crossed the Han River at several points and were reported to be converging on Chungking, strategic town on the east bank of the Han River northwest of Hankow.

U. S. Inquiring Into Drop in Cotton Price

result was a scramble to sell, and a sharp break in the price. Duvel admitted that he might not find anything untoward at all. He plans to return to Washington Saturday.

The rise in prices, it is pointed out, had occurred in the face of a 14,000,000-bale American cotton surplus. Moreover, speculation in the Bombay, India, market was curbed this week by abolition of puts and calls. And a rise in transatlantic shipping rates has tended to widen the normal spread between New York and Liverpool cotton prices. "One factor in the rise, it is said, was impatient buying by British dealers who were short of cotton."

Administrative officials are said to be anxious to see a "normal" rise in cotton prices. Speculative advances which may result in setbacks, however, are regarded as undesirable.

Most Government economists were inclined to attribute recent advances in cotton, wheat and corn to normal supply and demand factors. In the case of cotton, they pointed to increased exports and domestic consumption.

The Census Bureau reported yesterday that domestic mill consumption in the first four months of the new marketing season which began August 1, totaled 2,659,007 bales as compared with 2,233,081 bales in the comparable period last season. This led some officials to predict that the domestic use this season might equal the record of 7,900,000 bales in 1937.

Duvel said the CEA was watching prices of wheat and other commodities over which it exercises regulatory powers, but was making no special investigation of price changes in any other commodity.

Bulgarian Mission To Seek Trade Pact With Soviet

Sofia, Dec. 14.—A Bulgarian delegation headed by Finance Minister Doderboloff will leave for Moscow next week to negotiate a trade and maritime pact with the Soviet government, it was officially announced tonight.

Although both countries are on the Black Sea, there have been no sea communications between them since the World War, nor have they any trade relations at present.

$100 Needed to Reunite 7 at Christmas

immediately if these families are to have Christmas cheer.

They were selected by five family welfare agencies, members of the Council of Social Agencies. The funds of these agencies are limited so they cannot respond to the needs of all. The situation of these families is such that they cannot qualify for public relief. The families are not habitual charity cases but are in such emergencies that they must have outside help now.

Case No. 38

Mr. S who is looking for work, is doubly burdened because his wife is unable to share the responsibilities of looking after the five children. She went to Gallinger Hospital last week and will have an operation as soon as the doctors think she is able to stand it.

She Worries About Children

The operation is so serious that Mr. and Mrs. S are troubled about the outcome. She is worried about the children, for they all are under 12 and the youngest are twelve, 14 months old. She is particularly concerned about the 4-year-old boy, who has been crippled since birth and cannot have special care. Mr. S is a painter but he has not been able to find regular work. Last week he made only $9. The family includes Mr. S's aged mother. Funds are needed for rent, food and clothing. With $120, these needs could be met for the next two months.

Case certified and help administered without cost by Catholic Charities. Amount needed $120.

Case No. 37

Mrs. J was only 23 when her first husband died, leaving her with three children to support. In addition, her grandmother was dependent on her. She had never worked, but with unskilled jobs she managed to feed and clothe her family for two years. Still young, she wanted something else from life. Mr. J came along, and with this second marriage came hope everything would be different.

But the second marriage was a complete disillusionment. Divorce followed, and again Mrs. J is faced with the heavy responsibility of providing for her children, and herself. She has been helped to get special training in clerical work and has just found a small-salaried position which will lead to better opportunities. She can meet the expenses of food and rent, but her earnings will not buy the blankets she needs or a winter coat to wear to work. There is no money for the small emergencies which

Union Plumber Says D. C. Local Bars His Work

Wouldn't Accept Transfer Card, Suit Charges

Thomas G. Jones, 32, 633 F street southwest, yesterday accused the A. F. of L. Plumbers Union of closing the Washington employment market to unionists transferring from other towns.

Jones sued in the District Court for damages and for a declaration of his rights. He asked that the union be compelled to accept him as a member and prevented from putting obstacles in the way of his getting work while the case is tried.

Claims Transfer Card

Named as defendants were the United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters of the United States and Canada, Plumbers Local, No. 5, and Ernest S. Ott, 133 Ingraham street northwest, business agent of the local.

Jones said in his complaint that he was a member in good standing of the national union and of Local 470, at Charleston, S. C. He said he was given a transfer card when he left Charleston, which entitled him, under the rules of the national union, to membership in any other local.

Barred From Jobs Offered

However, Jones charged, Ott and other Washington officers refused to accept his transfer card and gave no reason except "that there were other men out of work who live in the District." The refusal has continued since November 23, he said. Attorney Frederick de Joseph, who is cocounsel for Jones with John J. O'Brien, said Jones had been unable to take two jobs offered him because he lacked union certification. When Jones' lawyers pleaded that his money was gone, Justice Proctor authorized filing of the suit without paying fees.

Enjoy the SCOTCH WITH A STORY

CHRISTMAS EVE in Northern Sweden looks like a Yuletide greeting card come to life... reindeer drawn sleds and snow-covered evergreens, a bright fire on every hearth and ribbons of smoke from each cottage chimney. And Captain White tells of a grand old Swedish Christmas custom called "Doppa i Gryten," or dipping into the dishpan. Before the holidays, each housewife prepares a huge, heaping pan full of delicious things to eat. Then on Christmas Eve the townsfolk go gaily from house to house, "dipping into the dishpan," singing carols, bringing Yuletide greetings and good cheer. Swedish hospitality has its counterpart in America. In many fine homes Christmas week means Open house. Good friends come and go, bringing gifts and receiving them. Let White Horse enhance this season's festivity. As a gift, or to serve holiday callers, White Horse is a sign of good taste. Match it if you can!

Travelers Aid Is Kept Busy By Christmas

Season Makes Most Defiant of Runaways Seek Transport Home

Rushing stranded men, women and children to their homes for Christmas is taxing the resources of the Travelers Aid Society, Mrs. Margaret Ford, executive of the Community Chest agency, reported yesterday.

Even the most defiant of young runaways melt with the approach of the season when home ties seem most important, she told the monthly meeting of the society's board of directors, presided over by Mrs. Marian Pike Stone.

"One 18-year-old boy, Charles C. is now well on his way home to another State, instead of in jail, where his runaway escapade threatened to land him," Mrs. Ford said.

"The boy left home," she continued, "because a limited income caused worry for his mother and he wanted to send her some money. Although he tried to find work here, stating his age was 18 instead of 16, he could get none, and, after attempted petty thievery, landed in court. An inquiry from the Travelers Aid in another city set the local agency's procedure to work, with the result that Charles has been released and is on his way home to his mother for Christmas."

Mrs. Ford pointed out the society tries to make Christmas merrier for travelers by assisting parents to buy toys and a "Christmas Day treat" for their children.

Individual travelers, especially boys and girls, are given a good dinner and taken to a movie "to make Christmas a little less lonely and at the same time prevent the necessity of standing in line for a basket or a meal, or being forced to panhandle, or worse," she said. In approximately 2,000 persons aided last month, Mrs. Ford said, were 18 runaway boys and girls, 243 dependent nonresidents, 5 unmarried mothers, 173 children traveling alone, 23 persons stranded by lack of funds, 18 stricken ill, 9 suffering mental derangement, 11 aged persons traveling alone and 223 persons in travel difficulties.

Besides Mrs. Stone, board members attending the meeting were E. H. Bunnell, Col. Robert H. Fletcher, Dorsey W. Hyde, Jr., Edward D. Merrill, Dion S. Birney, Ernest I. Lewis, Mrs. George Beale Bloomer, Dr. Stuart A. Rice, Bruce Mohler, Mrs. Owen J. Robert, W. B. Clarkson, Mrs. Carl Fleming, and Mrs. James B. Woolnough.

Pass for Rails To Coast Found 50 Years Ago

Stevens Lives Today; Made Possible the Great Northern

By Gladwin Hill
Associated Press Staff Writer
Summit, Mont., Dec. 14.—Through a howling gale and waist-deep drifts of snow, the keen-eyed, jut-jawed young man and his Indian guide forged on . . .

It was 50 years ago. The wind, battering away at the peaks of the Northern Montana Rockies, drove the temperature down to 40 below, but the two pressed ahead.

When they finally stopped for the night, the Indian muttered ominously to himself and shook his head when dawn lifted the blackness from the peaks, he looked up at them in awe and groaned, "me . . . sick . . ."

The young man said nothing, only set his jaw even firmer. He had expected this. But he was determined to go on, somehow. Perhaps, something told him, subconsciously, he was on the verge of a great discovery.

Nation A-booming
Amid the pangs and tortures of pioneering a modern nation was being born east in Maine. He was pushing their great steel arteries across the continent, to make the America of today.

And back in St. Paul, James J. Hill, of the Great Northern railway—the "empire builder"—had conceived of pushing his line straight across through the Rockies to the Pacific, to open up a trade route from the Great Lakes to the Orient.

He had set his iron will on a project that had been insurmountable for 30 years. Before the Civil War, the Government had surveyed possible routes through the lowering Rockies, and had found the only feasible place to penetrate that timeless barricade was around Helena and Butte, Mont., a "detour" far to the south.

Frustrated 30 Years
But the expert who made that report had added a portentous footnote. He had a strange certainty that eventually there would be discovered a legendary hidden pass in the north—a veritable golden gate permitting a straight road to the riches of the Orient and to American continental fulfillment.

But for 30 years, the best of the pioneers had shaken their heads in frustration over this prediction. Then James J. Hill determined to realize it.

For the job was selected a young engineer named John F. Stevens from down east in Maine, who had jumped from an assistant city engineer in Minneapolis to an ace boss in the construction of the Duluth-Sault Ste. Marie Railroad.

Stevens could look at a wilderness or a mountainside and tell whether a railroad could go there, just where it should go, and how much it would cost to build it; he knew frontier life and the Indians; and, above all—he was familiar with the Blackfeet Indian legend that there was a hidden pass in the Northern Montana Rockies.

Passes Deceptive
He set out. He discovered the Blackfeet legend always had remained a legend because they had been afraid to investigate; they feared the strange gods that dwelt in the mountains. When Stevens went to the Blackfeet, they refused to go one step of the way with him.

He finally found a member of the Flathead tribe who was willing to take a chance. Together they sallied forth against the great walls of the Rockies.

The found a pass and started into it. But it came to an abrupt end. It was a false pass that simply curved around and brought them abruptly up against the forbidding eastern slope of the mountains again.

They went back and started once more. They found a more promising pass and followed it, only to be betrayed again.

A third time they went back and began the slow climb over huge boulders, under blockading cliffs, through gulches and icy streams, in the constant unspoken fear they were deluded again.

Still the blind end did not come. This might be the pass! Then the jealous spirits of the mountains, having failed with all their topographical terrors to daunt the pioneer pair, loosed on them the savage forces of high-rocky weather.

It clouded up, the winds shrilled, the temperature plunged, a blizzard enveloped them. They weathered the night, but in the morning came the frightened Indian's moan.

"Sick . . . No go on . . ."

So young Stevens started out alone, climbing higher and onward. He pushed his way into a wide valley, with no resistance to a pass. Night came. He was alone.

Forced to stop, he could not even find firewood and began tramping around in a circle in the darkness to keep the icy blasts from penetrating his blood with that tingling, numbing chill that meant death.

Around and around he passed, until, dizzy with cold and fatigue, he could not see and lost all track of time.

Pulling himself finally out of an involuntary daze, he lifted his head and opened his eyes to discover it was dawn once more—and that he was looking down—down—at a lower range of mountains.

Fifty Years Ago
No more overpowering walls—he was looking down the Western slope of the Rockies! He had found the hidden pass. Here, the railroad could cut straight through the peaks. The golden pathway to the Orient was open!

It was December 11, 50 years ago.

He staggered back along his own trail, found his frightened, half-frozen Indian guide and managed to get him back to a settlement.

Then Stevens trekked 100 miles to a telegraph station to wire back to James J. Hill his epoch-making report—the report that made possible the present Great Northern Railroad.

Stevens lives today, 88 years old, and one of history's greatest engineers.

From the discovery of the Vital Marias Pass, he went on to other accomplishments renowned around the world.

In 1890, a year later, he found the pass that led the Great Northern through the Cascade Mountains in Washington—Stevens Pass. It was here that, ironically, he met James J. Hill for the first time.

War Knocks Props From Leaf Market

Large Part of U. S. Crop Is Exported To Great Britain

By the Associated Press

Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 14.—One doesn't associate tobacco particularly with war. But down on the tobacco belt the grower does. The man who cultivates the plant that goes into your cigarette is asking whether it'll be a short or a long war.

The tobacco farmer is used to vicissitudes. The sales holiday is no stranger to him. He has tried, later rejected, and now plans to try again, crop control.

War Hits Market

The outbreak of war in Europe gave him a terrific jolt. It knocked the bottom out of the tobacco market. A large part of the American crop is exported, mainly to Great Britain. With the start of the war the Imperial Tobacco Co. and other foreign companies withdrew buyers from the hundreds of auction warehouses in the Carolinas.

The British companies ordinarily buy about 35 per cent of the better grade of cigarette. The 1938 season had started none too auspiciously.

The tobacco sales year begins early in the summer in Georgia and Florida. A few weeks later sales begin on the South Carolina belt, which also takes in nearly a dozen "border" North Carolina tobacco towns. Still a few weeks later the eastern North Carolina belt is the auction season.

When war began eastern North Carolina was in the middle of its season. The season was over on the Florida-Georgia belt and almost over in South Carolina. It was just about to begin on the middle belt of North Carolina, another big one. It was still some weeks before later North Carolina and Virginia would open.

All these are known as bright leaf belts.

Actress Moved to Write Play By a Circumstantial Trial

Miss Cumming, Author of 'The Woman Brown,' Indignant at London Murder Case, But Never Learned Defendant's Fate

By Frank Young

United Press Staff Correspondent

New York, Dec. 14.—When Dorothy Cumming, former actress, was in London in 1933 she happened to pick up a newspaper one day and read an account of an obscure murder trial in Dorchester.

The evidence, including the testimony of a child, was circumstantial, so Miss Cumming sat right down and wrote an angry letter to the Times. As the trial progressed more letters were written but it was like "running up against a stone wall," she said.

"Circumstantial evidence was a phobia with me," she explained as she sat in a darkened theater watching a final rehearsal of "The Woman Brown," her play attacking the use of this type of evidence, which opened last Friday night.

So Public Can See

"This play shows a murder committed," Miss Cumming said. "The audience sees the evidence and then sees how dangerous circumstantial evidence is when presented in court and tried in court."

"You can write a million letters protesting its use, but a play is so much more effective because the public can see how a person can be wrongly convicted."

"The Woman Brown" is the fourth play Miss Cumming has written but it is the first to be produced. She also is director—the first time she has ever attempted such a task. Francisca Gaal, of the movies, and Colla Keith-Johnson are among the featured performers.

"I brought the play over here in 1936 and every producer in New York saw it and rejected it," she said. "I had to have the manuscript retyped nine times because it was worn out traveling around the offices."

Movies Bid for It

"Then last summer it was put on at the summer theater in Provincetown—it was just by accident because of a mixup in the schedule—and every movie company bid on it. Within a week it was sold to Warner Brothers for Bette Davis," she said.

After a stage career that started in Australia and included appearances on Broadway under David Belasco, Miss Cumming went to Hollywood in 1924, where she remained until 1932. During that time she appeared in many pictures, always as a "bad" woman with one notable exception—when she portrayed the Virgin Mary in Cecil B. DeMille's epic, "King of Kings."

Expert Gives Formula for Restoring Jobs

Productive Activity Must Increase 25% Over 1929, He Says

By Max L. Brown

United Press Staff Correspondent
New York, Dec. 14.—America's unemployment problem will be solved only through increasing the purchasing power of the consuming public to a level which will support a national productive activity 25 per cent above the boom levels of 1929.

That, in short, is the opinion of W. T. Livingston, director of the division of economics, trade and industry, of the Bureau of Business Conditions of the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

The economist, whose figures on unemployment are used widely by governmental bureaus, reached his conclusion on the basis of a study made for the United Press.

Two Questions

The study was designed to answer two questions: Why, with business activity currently around the boom levels of 1929, are there almost 10,000,000 people unemployed?

What business conditions will be necessary to give these people jobs? Livingston said that around 9,500,000 people are unemployed today compared with only 2,851,000 in 1929, although industrial operations now are equal to or better than in the boom year.

"One of the main factors," he said, "is the increase in the supply of workers which has occurred since 1929. In October, 1929, the total supply of workers numbered 48,500,000. In October this year the supply had risen to 52,151,000, an increase of 3,651,000 persons."

(Company Uws, Ironagonly m m m

Fewer Employed
He added that fewer persons are employed at the present time than in 1929 despite the recovery of production. The total number of persons employed in October, 1939, was 42,287,000, compared with 45,649,000 in October, 1929, a decrease of 3,362,000.

"Thus with 2,851,000 persons unemployed in 1929," he said, "the supply of workers up 3,651,000 in the last 10 years and 3,382,000 less persons now employed to produce about the same amount of goods as in 1929, we have a grand total of almost 10,000,000 unemployed."

Increased efficiency, Livingston pointed out, has made it possible for most branches of production—industrial and agricultural—to turn out the same quantity of goods as in 1929 with fewer workers. And this decline has not been entirely offset by shortened working hours.

Output Per Man Higher

"This situation," Livingston added, "is illustrated by the manufacturing industry. Since 1929 the output per man hour has shown an increase of approximately 25 per cent. The number of hours worked per employee has fallen 14 per cent in the same period. Consequently it takes only 93 men at present to produce the same quantity of goods as it took 100 men in 1929."

"Even in agriculture economy has been practiced in the case of hired labor. The decrease in hired labor on farms in October as compared with the same month in 1929 was greater than the decrease in the shipments of agricultural products to market."

Richmond to Seal Records of 1937 For Year 2037

In the box, which is 36 inches long, 18 inches high and 11 inches deep, will go official publications; a manuscript of "the Calvacade of the Cavaliers," the bicentennial show; promotional material, photographs of officials and other pictures taken at the celebration, and other items that will help recall the Richmond of 1937.

When the material is all assembled, the container will be sealed for its long rest until 2037.

d'Almeida, Hans Thomsen, whose usual suave manner was decidedly missing.

Also coming in for his share of attention was the British Ambassador, the Marquess of Lothian, who appeared in all his gold-braided glory a good quarter of an hour before the line started moving toward President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Smaller than in other years, the reception drew less than 500 guests, instead of the usual 1,200 to 1,500 that have attended similar functions in other years. Only high-ranking Government officials and a scattering of former officials or widows of former officials, were in the gathering that broke up much earlier than usual.

Strict rules of protocol were observed in order to prevent any "incidents" and members of the working press, which in former years have been allowed to roam free in the state dining room from the minute the diplomatic line started toward the blue room, were bottled up for more than half an hour in the green room, where only a small part of the passing line could be observed at a time. Later, they were allowed to stroll into the large hall or even into the sacred precinct of the state dining room itself exactly as other guests.

Ceremony Observed

Earlier, however, other points of procedure observed in previous years has been followed to the last gesture. Shortly after 9 o'clock, the Marine Band struck up "Hail to the Chief" just as the doors opened for the President and his military and naval aides, Mrs. Roosevelt, and all members of the Cabinet who are in town. From the dining room the Chief Executive's little parade moved with the usual pomp and ceremony into the broad hall, and on to the Red Room.

There, the Cabinet contingent took its stand, while the President and the First Lady went on to the Blue Room. And there, before a background of smiles and frowns, they stood to greet the long line of guests.

Mrs. Roosevelt was gowned in oyster white satin, fashioned on draped lines. Over her shoulders was an heirloom lace mantilla, and she wore a corsage of orchids.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull headed the Cabinet members attending the reception—many of whom were conspicuous by their absence. Mrs. Hull, regal as always, had donned a silver and white brocade gown with a sweeping skirt which reached its greatest fullness in the back. Emerald and rhinestone clips added color to the décolletage and the completed the ensemble with a rope of pearls. During the reception the Hulls were greeted on all sides by members of the diplomatic corps.

Wallace Not There

Chatting with a gentleman in the Red Room, Mrs. Henry A. Morgenthau, Jr., who accompanied her husband, the Secretary of the Treasury, to the reception, was regretting that she did not visit Finland on her trip abroad this summer.

The Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring, escorted Mrs. Henry A. Wallace into the Red Room. The Secretary of Agriculture did not attend the reception. Mrs. Wallace wore a shell pink gown trimmed with inserts of duobonnet net. The Postmaster General and Mrs. James A. Farley were also on the absentee list last night. Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins entered on the arm of Attorney General Murphy. Mrs. Perkins' gown of grape-tone crepe was simply cut.

The Acting Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison, who have "Gone With the Wind" (they are in Atlanta for the premier of the motion picture) were not there. Missed also were the Secretary of Interior and Mrs. Ickes. They have left for Winnetka, Ill., where tomorrow they will attend the wedding of the Secretary's son, Raymond Ickes, and Miss Miralotte Lucia Sauer. The Secretary of Commerce, Harry Hopkins, was unable to attend the reception.

Mrs. Davies in Black

The Ambassador to Belgium and Mrs. Joseph Davies were there, she in a handsome black velvet frock and a becoming "up hair-do" that featured a gray streak from front to back. Commissioner Hazen was there, as were Commissioner and Mrs. George Allen, Dr. and Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, Mrs. William N. Doak, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Deimel, Mr. and Mrs. Loy Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, and Mr. and Mrs. Jay Pierrepont Moffat.

Adding her particular brand of glamour to the party was the one debutante who "made" the reception—Miss Patricia Hurley, daughter of the former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick Hurley. Appearance at the diplomatic reception is probably the nearest thing to a court presentation that a debutante can have in this democratic country.

Chatting with the official group in the red room were the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles. Mrs. Welles' black lace gown was relieved by a handsome string of pearls. Meanwhile, the diplomatic corps had assembled in the East Room; had found their places in line, strictly according to rank, and were waiting for the signal to move slowly toward the Blue Room. Precedence stipulated that Ambassadors be received first by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt in order of the length of their service in Washington. Then Ministers ranked on the same basis, with Charges d'Affaires bringing up the rear.

The continued absence of the German Ambassador kept the German contingent out of the line directly ahead of the French Embassy staff, and brought them along at the rear. But the Japanese delegation walked in on the heels of the Chinese; and the Soviet contingent came in just ahead of Great Britain's, the latter of which had headed the line for many years.

In the State Dining Room, after guests had been received by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the real "story" broke. The Soviet Embassy staff, moving as one man, went quickly to the end of the room and stayed there until they left approximately an hour later. Chatting with Ambassador Omskany most of the time was the Latvian Minister, Alfred Bilmanis.

The Finnish delegation and the German found themselves standing by each other, cheek by jowl, in the State dining room; but no word of greeting, no nods of recognition, were exchanged.

Among diplomats who stopped to talk with him were the Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander; the Spanish Ambassador, Don Juan Francisco de Cacerenas, and the Netherlands Minister, Dr. A. Loudon. In most cases, these chats were quickly terminated.

Very much on the dressy side also were envoys from countries steeped in tradition, while ambassadors and ministers from nations that have undergone change in recent years were among those in the white tie contingent.

The Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, Peruvian Ambassador Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, led the long line from the east room, through the green room and into the blue room, where he and members of his staff exchanged brief and cordial greetings with President and Mrs. Roosevelt. His dark blue uniform, trimmed in gold braid bore a handsome collection of medals, and was set off with a sword and a plumed hat, jauntily carried in his left hand.

Gold Braid, Plumed Hats, Diamond Bracelets and Tiaras Abound at Party for Envoys

Peru's Ambassador,
Heads Long Line

de Garland and their daughter, Senora Tudela Garland. Senora de Garland appeared in a Lanvin gown of bluish gray silk, made on simple lines. On the front of the fitted bodice was an ancient emerald, encrusted with brilliants, which had belonged to her great-grandmother. A diamond bracelet, a small diamond tiara and a corsage of orchids were other accessories for her handsome ensemble. Senora Garland had chosen a frock of sky blue silk, fashioned on bouffant lines.

All members of the Peruvian staff were in uniform and all their ladies were trimly attired in up-to-the-minute fashions. Senora de Labarthe, who appeared on the gold-braided arm of her husband, Capt. Enrique Labarthe, naval attaché, was in blue satin, made with a fitted bodice and a billowing skirt, and worn with long gloves of the same shade, a necklace and bracelet of pearls and an orchid corsage. Senora Teresa Labarthe had chosen a period model champagne net, accented with a gold belt and gold costume jewelry.

Stunning was the word for Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, who came through the line with the second diplomatic group to be presented to President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Her Molyneux frock of gray crepe, trimmed with rhinestones, was made on Empire lines, with a square neckline and puffed sleeves. Silver embroidery in a leafy design edged the neckline and also decorated a panel just above the hem of the skirt. A silver embroidered belt cinched the high waistline, and a gray chiffon scarf was gracefully draped from the shoulders. A diamond clip glittered at either side of the neckline and matched the bracelets that set off the costume to perfection. The Argentine Ambassador, Don Felipe A. Espil, wore white tie and tails.

In similar attire was the Turkish Ambassador, Mehmet Munir Ertegun, whose country does not permit its envoys to wear diplomatic uniforms. Mme. Ertegun's pretty frock was made entirely of copper and gold lame, fashioned with a shirred waist and an accordion plaited skirt. Her only ornaments were two exquisite turquoise clips placed at either side of the square neckline.

Sartorial Triumph

Leading his flock of staff members was the Belgian Ambassador, Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, whose gold-encrusted uniform and plumed hat were among the major sartorial triumphs of the evening. "But will he be in the line-up next year?" was a question you heard on more than one side as he made his way down the line.

One of the largest contingent presented was that of Mexico, headed by the Ambassador, Dr. Don Francisco Castillo Najera and Senora de Castillo Najera. The latter was attractively turned out in bouffant black net, trimmed with maribou and sequins and worn with long black gloves. The Ambassador, who has more decorations than any other envoy in Washington, wore plenty of them last night and was a center of much attention.

The Polish staff, headed by the personable and popular Count Jerzy Potocki, in full dress uniform, went through the line next; and then came the Ambassador of Ecuador, Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, heading his staff. Among the ladies in his group were Senora de Maria Louisa de Sosa, gowned in black velvet; and Senora Eugenia de Sosa, who had chosen a pretty frock of beige net.

In conventional white tie and tails, the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga, stepped up next with a courtly bow to present to President and Mrs. Roosevelt the members of his large contingent. First in the group were the Minister Counselor Dr. Jose T. Baron, who has attended many such receptions, and his attractive wife, who wore black velvet, made with a full skirt of velvet, trimmed in lace to match the lace appliqued on the fitted bodice.

Only 2 Germans in Uniform

In standard evening dress were all men from the German Embassy, with the exception of the Military and Air Attache, Lieut. Gen. Friedrich von Boetticher, and the Naval Attache, Vice Admiral Robert Witthoef-Emden, who appeared in full uniform. Frau Thomsen, who came through the line with her husband, wore a full-skirted pale pink organza, the tight bodice of which was encrusted with rhinestones. Two strings of pearls and diamond earrings further accented her costume.

Frau von Boetticher was attired in black, but the other women in the German contingent wore either white or pastels. An unusually attractive gown was the simple white crepe one, encrusted with rhinestones and worn by Frau Tannenberz, wife of the German First Secretary.

Making his second appearance at a White House diplomatic reception was the French Ambassador, Count de Saint Quentin, whose gold braided uniform, ribbons and glittering decorations had a sizable slice of the spotlight most of the evening.

Chalking up a special victory for France was the attire of Mme. Emmanuel Lombard, wife of the French Military Attache, who had chosen a frock of black crepe, worn with a pink soft wool jacket, embroidered in rhinestones. Long black gloves and an antique diamond pendant set off her costume, which also featured a corsage of pink camellias. Col. Lombard, in full uniform of the French army, had among his decorations a distinguished service medal. He was the first French officer to receive this special honor following the World War.

Next down the line came the Colombian delegation, guided by Ambassador Don Miguel Lopez Pumarejo, and after his staff was presented, all eyes were turned on the colorful Chinese group in which the ladies were dressed in native costume and the men stepped forth in full uniform. The Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih, effected introductions, which were punctuated with many Oriental bows, and the line moved on once more. Walking directly behind the Ambassador was the Counselor of the Embassy, Dr. Chang Lok Chen, whose black costume was embroidered in gold braid made into the shape of plum blossoms—the national flower of China. Red satin bands on each sleeve and decorations were also noted in his impressive attire.

Mme. Chen wore a typical Chinese frock of pale green satin embroidered with cranes sitting on pine trees. (Cranes were, in old China, an emblem for ladies of high rank). Made on fitted lines, with slits on both sides, the gown was hemmed with four rows of different shades of green satin. Frogs at the neckline served as ornaments, and a bracelet, necklace, earrings and rings of jade, pearls and diamonds also were features of her attractive ensemble.

Directly behind the Chinese delegation came the Japanese, in equally glittering array; every male member in uniform with a cocked hat. Stepping out with a deep bow, the Japanese Ambassador, Kensei Horiuchi, made the presentations. With him was Mme. Horiuchi, who wore a cream-colored frock of heavy satin, untrimmed, and fashioned with a flared skirt. Another of the unusually large contingents, the Japanese stopped the line for almost eight minutes, while President and Mrs. Roosevelt exchanged greetings with them.

Appearing in an Alix frock, flown to America by clipper from France especially for the occasion, Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, was a center of much attention when the next diplomatic group came down the line. Her all-white gown was made with a tightly draped bodice of jersey and a full skirt of faille, beautifully draped.

With the Venezuelan Ambassador, Dr. Don Diogenes Escalante, well to the fore, the Venezuelan staff was the next to appear before the Chief Executive and the First Lady. On the arm of her father was pretty, petite Senora Maria Teresa Escalante, who looked like something out of a picture book in her becoming frock of old silver lame, fashioned with a long straight tunic and belted in green velvet. Other ladies of the Venezuelan Embassy, also smartly attired, stepped forward to exchange greetings with the hosts.

and the line moved on once more. Headed by the Ambassador, Prince Colonna and his attractive wife, Donna Elly Colonna, the Italian contingent made a showing of which Il Duce himself might well be proud. Some of the men were in uniform, glittering with decorations; and the women were among the most smartly attired in the entire gathering. In full Italian naval regalia was the naval attaché, Capt. don Umberto Cugia, who with his wife, the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola, was attending the last White House party of the year.

In other words, Signet is light even before it reaches the aging casks.

Warfare Fails to Curtail Splendor as Diplomats Gather at White House for Reception

Wives of Chinese Diplomats Wear Native Costumes

House reception that he expects to attend in many years. He and his wife are returning to their native land shortly.

Golden sigillaries and a splendid array of decorations adorned the uniform of the Italian military attaché, Col. Vincenzo Coppola, who walked down the receiving line with Signora Coppola.

One of the unusually modish ensembles seen in the crowd was that of Countess Roberti, wife of the Italian secretary. She appeared in a French model of draped white jersey, elegantly simple and extremely effective.

The Ambassador of Panama and Senora de Boyd were accompanied by their daughter, Senora Dora Boyd. The envoy's wife had chosen fresh colored tulle made with a close fitting bodice of sequins and very full skirt, and her pretty daughter wore a dress of the same material in a smoke-blue shade, trimmed with ostrich feathers.

Senora de Cabero wore black net embroidered with black spangles and silver paillettes. She was accompanied by her husband, the Chilean Ambassador.

Senora Cristina Michel, who makes her home with the Chilean envoy and Senora de Cabero, arrived with them, wearing flowered taffeta made with a full skirt.

One of the smaller embassy staffs in the throng was that of the Czechoslovak envoy, Don Juan Francisco de Cardenas, who was accompanied by Senora de Cardenas. The latter was an attractive figure in a Molyneux model of heavy eggshell gold brocade cut with a fitted bodice and a full skirt. A diamond clip on her shoulder matched her ring.

Mme. Oumansky Wore Blue

Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Soviet Ambassador, who was in the group her husband presented to President and Mrs. Roosevelt, wore French blue satin, full skirted and with a light bodice trimmed in rhinestones and set off with an orchid corsage.

Further down the line than they have been in many years were representatives of His Britannic Majesty, headed by the British Ambassador, the Marquess of Lothian, who was another making his debut at a White House diplomatic reception. Since Great Britain is still in mourning for Princess Louise, last daughter of Queen Victoria, all women in the contingent wore black, and all had mourning bands on their sleeves.

Mrs. Curzon-Howe, wife of the British naval attaché, who is ranking lady at the Embassy, had on black velvet, softly draped on fitted lines and ending in a short train. A diamond tiara, bracelet, brooches and a pearl necklace were her ornaments. Capt. Curzon-Howe wore his full dress naval uniform.

Tall stately Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Swedish Minister, accompanied her husband and his staff down the receiving line. Her frock of pale blue crepe was made on straight lines and was embroidered with silver to match the bandes on her hair. The Minister of Sweden wore full uniform, black, and embroidered in gold.

The Minister of Guatemala, Dr. Don Adrian Recinos, accompanied by Senora de Recinos and their pretty daughter, Senora Laura Margarita Recinos, headed the Guatemalans.

Mme. Bianchi, who gets her clothes from Paris, wore a stunning Lavin model of red and silver changeable brocade, with wide medieval sleeves of silver lace. A pearl necklace, and diamond earrings to match her large solitaire ring completed her costume. Her artistic daughter, Miss Sibilla Skidelsky, was a picture in white crepe, made on Empire lines with puffed sleeves and a border of gold leaves around the square neckline. She wore her hair braided in Grecian style, and used as color with her costume handsome earrings and a ring of jade. She and her mother were accompanied by Senor Bianchi, the Portuguese Minister.

Graustarkian in his splendor was the Minister of Hungary, John Peleny, whose Hungarian uniform was the center of all eyes, as he walked down the line. Black velvet, edged with black fur, had a cape swinging by a silver chain. The Hungarian envoy's costume was further enhanced by his hat, trimmed with a slender aigrette. Mme. Peleny had chosen a frock of changeable blue and copper taffeta, trimmed with an aqua clip and worn with pearls and diamonds.

Because her legation is in court mourning for Princess Louise, Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the South African Minister, wore black, a gown fashioned of lace and chiffon.

Norway is among the countries which picturesquely choose their diplomats to wear uniforms, so the Minister, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstjerne, was resplendent in navy blue with gold embroidery on the front of the jacket, gold on the cuffs, and gold stripes on the trousers.

Mrs. Munthe's wife was a contrast in white tulle, with a cape of ostrich feathers. Her dress was made with a full skirt and had fine brae embroidered on the bodice and her jewels were a pair of diamond clips and a pearl necklace. Chatting with a group of other Latin American diplomats were the Minister of El Salvador and Senora de Castro, the latter wearing gray chiffon and a corsage of orchids. Their daughter, Senora Elena Castro, was in white lace.

Smiling, bowing, and seeming to know every person present was the Greek Minister, Demetrios Silianos, who wore a handsome braided uniform. Among those he presented to the President and Mrs. Roosevelt were the Greek Minister-Counselor, George S. Depasta, and Mme. Depasta, the latter gowned in black velvet, embroidered in gold.

Dainty young Mme. Rajamaitri, who resembles a Tanagra figurine, was a picture in gold and salmon pink lace, close fitting, and caught up at the side and draped over one shoulder. A necklace of diamonds and pearls sparkled at her throat.

Mme. Zadek, who accompanied her husband, the Minister of Lithuania, was attired in light blue silk moire, made with a fitted bodice, and a full skirt trimmed with lace. Dark-haired Mme. Fotich, wife of the Minister of Yugoslavia, was effective in white chiffon, made with a full skirt and a bodice of mother-of-pearl sequins. A green orchid was pinned at her shoulder. Her husband was among the gold-braid contingent.

Coming along in the line next were the Latvian Minister and Mme. Bilmanis and members of the Latvian staff. Mme. Bilmanis wore pastel blue crepe, close fitting, with a diamond clip and bracelets to match.

Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister, was gowned in white crepe, embroidered in rhinestones and made with a V-neckline and a flaring skirt. She accompanied the Minister and members of his staff.

Mme. Naumoff, wife of the Bulgarian Minister, wore heavy white crepe, with a lightly draped bodice and a moderately full skirt em-fashioned with a full front and trimmed with gold braid arranged in a beautiful leaf design. Her ornaments were a pearl necklace with bracelets to match, and her corsage was of white camellias.

Mrs. Brennan in Wine Lace

Accompanied by their three daughters were the genial Irish Minister and Mrs. Robert Brennan, the latter of whom was attired in wine lace, made with a full skirt and long sleeves, trimmed in rhinestones. Miss Emer Brennan appeared in gray wool jersey; Miss Maeva Brennan wore a green ensemble, and Miss Deirdre Brennan wore a black frock, set off with gold ornaments.

A silver lame scarf lightened the black velvet dress worn by Mme. Hassan Bey, wife of the Egyptian envoy, who chose as her only ornament a scarab bracelet. The Minister was in the conventional white tie, with several medals.

Pale gray, which is so smart this year, had been chosen by Mme. London, pretty blonde wife of the Netherlands Minister. Her gown was made on Grecian lines, and in her golden hair she wore diamonds, as well as a necklace and earrings of diamonds and sapphires. Ranking lady in the Finnish contingent was Mme. Solanka, wife of the Secretary of the Legation. Her blue frock was cut on simple lines, and was not selected especially for the occasion. Her deep concern for the plight of her country has kept her mind well off the subject of dress, she said.

Wearing a dress of black silk net, trimmed in Spanish lace, Senora de Caesars accompanied her husband, the Minister of Honduras, when he escorted his staff through the receiving line. Next came the Minister of Denmark and Mme. de Kauffmann and then the Canadian Minister, Loring C. Christie, and the Canadian contingent.

Mrs. Walter A. Riddell, wife of the Canadian Counselor, had chosen a frock of black velvet, made with a sweetheart neckline and a short train. A gardenia corsage, and pearls and diamonds further enhanced her attractive costume.

The wife of the Swiss Minister, Mme. Brugmann, who is a sister of the Secretary of Agriculture, wore a close fitting Molyneux gown of acqua crepe with gold and silver embroidery outlining the neck and shoulder.

Mme. Fernandez, bride of the newly arrived Minister of Paraguay, was very excited last evening, as this was her first White House reception. Her gown of white gown was covered with illusion of the same shade, and trimmed with a diamond clip. A diamond star twinkled in her hair.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

The Soviet Pledge

ENTIRELY ASIDE from the outrages against Poland and Finland, which may be none of this country's business, the question whether to continue relations with Soviet Russia rests on a comparison of the promises of the Stalin government with the performances of its agents here. If its agents have violated the promises given by Maxim Litvinov in November, 1933, at the price of recognition, the United States is released from the bargain.

This country recognized Russia on the basis of a pledge by Litvinov, as Soviet commissar of foreign affairs, to "respect the indisputable right of the United States to order its own life within its own jurisdiction and in its own way and to refrain from interfering in any manner in its internal affairs." He wrote, further, that it would be the country's policy to "restrain all organizations under its direct or indirect control" from any act, overt or covert, "liable in any way, to invade the tranquillity, prosperity, order or security of the whole or any part of the United States."

Political Party In Form Only

SINCE THEN the Communist Party has taken a lively part in American internal affairs. This organization is an American political party in form only. By the admission of its own general secretary, Earl Browder, in his testimony before the Dies Committee, it is subsidiary and subservient to the Communist International in Moscow, which is controlled by the Soviet government. This party endorsed President Roosevelt for re-election, its agents have engineered a revolutionary political movement in organized labor, and only recently in California, it gave active belligerent support to a proposal to abolish the American form of government and establish a dictatorship in the guise of an old-age pension proposal called ham-and-eggs.

Reds Interfered In U. S. Affairs

THE PROPOSITION that the Communist Party has interfered in the internal affairs of the United States need not be argued. They concede it. It is their boast and reason for being.

Their defense is, however, that they are not part of a foreign organization. There is no objection to activities here of organizations allied to foreign organizations. The Salvation Army, the Catholic Church and the Y. M. C. A. are international. The question deals with activities hostile to the tranquillity of the country and of a nature voluntarily renounced by Litvinov. And, because Americans knew from past experience that any interference by the Communists under orders from Moscow would necessarily be disruptive, Litvinov was required to promise that the Soviet government would not interfere "in any manner." Otherwise the Soviet agents would have been able to raise a pretense that they were interfering for this country's own good.

Comintern Ruled U. S. Communists

AS TO WHETHER the Communist Party is part of an organization controlled by the Soviet government, Browder finally was compelled to lay it on the line before the Dies Committee. After many slippery evasions Browder admitted that the American Communist Party was affiliated with the Comintern, that its members were required to agree with all decisions of the Comintern and that any member who disagreed must be expelled.

He said also that if the United States opposed the "peace" policy of Soviet Russia, a policy now expressed by military invasion of both Poland and Finland in the role of "peaceful" aggressor, he would be obliged to support Russia rather than the United States. By extension, if Soviet Russia were to attack this country in the interests of "peace" Browder and all Communists would support the enemy just as a few Finnish Communists have welcomed the Red army and established a mock government under a Finnish traitor long resident in Moscow.

The case of interference and the traitorous character of the Communist Party being established, the question remains whether severance of relations with Russia would hurt us or them the more. But it is up to the American Government, by application of its own laws, to smash this hostile conspiratorial body.

Prizes Announced For Cavalry Officers

The War Department announced yesterday that the Cavalry leadership test for small units during the past year had been won by two mechanized and one horse-platoon. First Lieut. Philip H. Bethune, of the First Cavalry, and First Lieut. Karl T. Gould, of the Thirtieth Cavalry, both of the mechanized brigade at the Fort Knox, Ky., receive trophies for heading the winning units, as does Second Lieut. John N. Swenson, of the Fourth Cavalry, of Fort Meade, S. Dak. Enlisted men of the groups divide prize money from a trust fund established by an anonymous donor in 1925.

There Is A Tide

CHAPTER III

WHEN LORD HALIFAX protested yesterday against the appeal of Lord Darnley and Lord Arnold, Conservative and Laborite peers, for a negotiated peace, he warned that such pleas would create the impression that Britain was not substantially united. He also declared sharply that Britain had never closed the door to negotiation. The British foreign minister summed up the government's view—which is undoubtedly the view of most of the country—that, although a peace after a long and bitter war would present difficulties, they would be no greater than those attending the making of a "patched-up" peace.

This column believes that a "patched-up" peace is not only impossible, but would merely be an armistice in a continuing war. You cannot "patch up" the differences between the totalitarian European conception of the Nazi government and any other conception which might be called free, or democratic, or humane, or consistent with anything in the tradition of Western civilization.

The differences between the Nazis and Stalin's Communists, this column has consistently maintained for years, superficial and adjustable.

The differences between either of them and the rest of the Western World are essential and incommensurable.

This does not make the struggle a struggle between capitalism and socialism. It is a struggle between a dynamic, revolutionary process, whose object is the total overturn of everything existing and great nations of people who resist in behalf of reason, experience and the right to evolve the necessary changes and adjustments in peace.

Outcome Is Essential To Neutral Nations

THE OUTCOME of this struggle is not a matter of indifference to the neutrals. For the European neutrals it is as important as it is to the European belligerents. For the outcome will determine the form of life and society which they must eventually share with the rest of Europe.

Nor is the outcome a matter of indifference to the United States. If the outcome should be general anarchy or sporadic revolutions, arising out of exhaustion and despair, the burden upon the United States of supporting and maintaining civilization on this continent will be intolerable. I greatly doubt whether we will be equal to it. That is the worst that can be envisaged.

In any case, the outcome of this struggle will determine the economic organization of Europe, and that economic organization will determine the whole world economy, of which ours is a part.

Either it will be one with which we can collaborate, with adjustments that can be made by reasonable men, or it will be one with which we must ruthlessly compete, with all the possible consequences of that competition—namely, and eventually, with ourselves as chief protagonists; unless we are willing simply to enter it, when the struggle is over, as the docile followers of the victors.

Neutrals Must Take Dynamic Action

THE ABOVE statement is too categorical to be allowed to pass

without further elaboration, but a column is limited in space, and for the time being I will argue from it, and return another time to elaborate and justify it. I believe it to be so; and from it I maintain that the neutrals, and especially the United States as the only large and powerful neutral nation left, must begin to formulate their plans for the future of Western civilization. Neutrality must not mean waiting and preparing to accept any outcome that can be imposed by the victors.

The neutrals must be dynamic. They must not be passive and disinterested observers, but an active force, working for the only kind of future world that will have any stability at all—a peaceful world whose policies are based upon reason, intelligence, realism and humanity.

The neutrals are in the advantageous position of objectivity, which is a quite different thing from impartiality. Objectivity means weighing the evidence and deducing conclusions in reason. Impartiality means refusing to consider the evidence or to reach any conclusion that might be favorable or unfavorable in whole or in part to either party.

That, at any rate is the interpretation of impartiality advanced by the neutrality advertisements currently appearing in Look. They invite us to suspend all thinking on world issues for the course of the war, on the grounds that it is too dangerous.

But nothing could be more dangerous for us, as a nation, than to follow their advice. It implies that impotence is a blessing because it spares people many earthly troubles. The grave, no, spares them all earthly troubles, so why not commit suicide?

Cynics Decry All Idealism

THE LOOK advertisements—I mention them as a particularly appalling example of the moral and intellectual depths to which it is possible for well intentioned people to fall—cynically decry all idealism. "America's heart is America's tragedy," says one of them. We have too much sympathy for the oppressed. The ideas "of making the world safe for democracy, of liberation of oppressed minorities, sound rather silly now, don't they?" the advertisements ask.

No, they don't. They sound tremendously real and sane. A goal is not silly because it has not yet been achieved. Walt Whitman said of liberty that "it is not daunted by one failure, or two failures, or any number of failures, nor by the sharp show of the tushes of power"—but he was an American poet, and not a clever writer in an advertising office.

Idealism is a force, and vision is something without which—says the Bible—the people perish. The vision of an immense nation whose frontiers are two great oceans was, and will be a world vision. Our neutrality should increase and sharpen it, not diminish it.

If we look around the world with the clarity that absence of panic can afford us, it is possible to discern some hopeful signs, suggestive of direction. Though the signs are discernible in every nation of Western civilization—in all the belligerents, and among the neutrals.

We shall try tentatively to record some of them—some of the small lights in the dark—and ask how we, as neutrals, can increase their wattage.

It's an Art

Selecting a Christmas Tree

Take Your Choice

Four types of evergreen trees are sold in Washington for Yuletide use. Samples of these are (left to right) balsam, spruce, cedar and pine. Experts at Christmas tree decorating recommend balsam and spruce because their needles are smaller and branches are grouped more symmetrically.

How to Keep It Fresh

Advice is given by dealers to keep the tree in water until it's decorated Christmas Eve. Cut the trunk on an angle and it will absorb water readily.

Traffic Council Votes Tonight On Stop Lights

Proposal to Increase Speed Limits Also Before D. C. Advisers

By Howard F. Wentworth •
Post Staff Writer

The Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Council tonight will decide on recent proposals to change the timing of Washington traffic lights and increase speed limits on certain arterial highways.

Suggested as measures to expedite mass traffic movement, the recommended light and speed changes already have been discussed by the council's committee on signs and signals. E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., and chairman of the committee, will submit his findings to the full council at 7:30 p. m. in the District Building.

Consideration of the changes was requested by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen following a series of articles on "Horse and Buggy Traffic" in The Washington Post. Heated debates are expected at the council session. A report, in the form of recommendations to either accept or veto the proposals, will be given the Commissioners at conclusion of the meeting.

Exhaustive Study Made

The group is composed of civic and business leaders who act in an advisory capacity to the Commissioners on traffic matters. Since publication of The Post stories, Merrill's committee, it was learned, has made exhaustive studies of traffic signals and their relationship to rush-hour and midday traffic movement.

After several weeks' survey, conducted by this writer from the layman's point of view, a series of ten articles was printed suggesting reforms. Proposals were:

Installation of a modified form or the so-called "voluntary" timing on certain streets.

Increase of the speed limit to 30 miles-an-hour on arterial highways with an ample supply of one-way north and southbound streets during peak hours.

A reasonable experiment with any new methods designed to move traffic more swiftly and relieve downtown rush-hour congestion.

Several Favor Changes

Several members of the advisory council have expressed views favoring changes. Post readers who responded to the series of articles were overwhelmingly in accord with suggested reforms.

The Post observer found the present "flexible progressive" system of light-timing fails to adequately move the great volume of traffic which swarms into the downtown section during morning and afternoon rush-hours.

Traffic authorities have admitted that Washington's business area carries a larger load of vehicles than any other city in the country, but contend funds are not available to make desired improvements in control methods.

Nazi Film Fans Forced to Attend Movies Earlier

The Germans are going to the movies earlier in the evening because of the war, and getting an early start on the day, says the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Many first-run show houses have advanced their evening performance to 8 and 8:30 o'clock. Under the old schedule, the last show closed too late, considering reduced street car and bus services.

Since the outbreak of hostilities, the average run of new productions is longer. Several old pictures, all treating with military or naval subjects, have been revived. To make the best possible use of new productions, all theaters now are required to run a picture for at least one week, the bureau reports.

Store Kris Kringle Sees Tears But Also Has Some Laughs

Hates to See Poor Mothers Embarrassed By Knowing He Can't Fulfill Pleas; Enjoys Effects of His Admonitions

A department store Santa Claus comes face to face with so much sadness that, strange as it seems, his heart has to be just a wee bit stony if he is to perform his duty well.

"Some of the things I see and hear," said the Santa of Palais Royal, relaxing during a momentary lull in the basement toyland, "force me to grit my teeth and look aside. Otherwise my emotions would get the best of me."

"There is the ragged wait who comes in, alone, to tell me tearfully I forgot him last Christmas and won't I please make up for it this time. And the poor children who are brought in by their mothers, only the mothers stand far back and turn their heads, embarrassed and unhappy because they know the child won't get what he asks for."

Funny Incidents, Too

"But for every bleak incident like that there are two funny ones. Just today a little girl walked up and I asked, 'Well, little sister, what do you want Santa to bring you?' Right back she came with, 'What've ya got?'"

"One boy, about 4 years old, told me he wanted a double-barreled shotgun, and it's gotta be a real one like daddy has, not a toy."

One Remembers Poor

"But I suppose the child I'll remember longest is the one who walked up and said, 'I'm not asking you for anything this time, Santa Claus, because I want you to give my toys to the poor children.'"

It's an ironic thing, says Palais Royal's Santa, but the best dressed youngsters almost always ask only for one or two toys, while the ill-clad ones from impoverished homes submit lists as long as a reindeer. Because he doesn't want to risk any damage to the Santa Claus legend, this particular understudy asked to have his other name withheld. So be it, then, for it is too near Christmas to offend the jolly old fellow who brings our gifts.

Van Duzer Looks At 20 Sites For Parking Lots

Washington may solve its parking troubles by establishing municipally owned day and night storage lots, it was indicated last night.

Traffic Director Van Duzer spent several hours yesterday on an inspection tour of some 20 sites where the lots could be opened. The sites are owned by the District and have been unused for many months. When the Commissioners announced recently the parcels would be sold unless they could be converted to some use, Van Duzer suggested the parking lot idea.

"It is all in the dream stage at the moment," Van Duzer said last night, "but the possibilities are wonderful. I believe we could operate the lots successfully by charging 15 or 20 cents for all-day parking. It would certainly take a lot of cars off the streets."

Driver Exonerated In Pedestrian's Death

Fred David, 23, of 723 B street southeast, was exonerated by a coroner's jury yesterday at an inquest into the traffic fatality of Irving K. Furman, 65, of Kansas City, Mo. Furman, a pedestrian, was struck by David's car on November 1 at First street and Massachusetts avenue northeast. He died Tuesday in Casualty Hospital. Witnesses testified he was not crossing at the crosswalk.

Traffic Rise Seen With New Airport

Oswald Ryan Predicts Sharp Increase in Travel in Address To Board of Trade

The Washington Board of Trade, which 11 years ago launched a fight for a great national airport at Gravelly Point, last night heard two speakers explain what the big air terminal will mean to the Capital City in terms of air travel and air commerce.

Oswald Ryan, a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, told 300 members of the board at the Willard Hotel that a sharp increase of air traffic into and out of Washington could be expected once the model airport is in operation. The present airport, he said, has reached a "saturation point."

Col. Sumner Smith, chairman of the interdepartmental engineering commission in charge of the airport, announced that the task of filling in the water area at Gravelly Point was two months ahead of schedule. The entire hydraulic fill for the flying field, he said, was completed last Saturday morning.

The flying surface of the $10,000,000 air terminal is scheduled to be completed July 4, and the entire project by Labor Day. Actual construction of buildings probably will get under way by March 1.

Surpassed by Other Cities
Ryan said that Washington already was an important center of air travel, being outstripped by only three other cities. He emphasized, however, that the city would be enjoying even greater air traffic when it got the fact that it lacked a modern airport.

"The increase in transport operations at the present Washington airport has been 30 per cent above that of a year ago; but even this is a much smaller increase than that shown by the cities of New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Atlanta—the centers whose volume controls the volume of operations at the Washington Airport."

"But while the volume of business at our Washington Airport—that is, the number of planes in and out—has increased 30 per cent, the volume of business of these other airports has increased 5 per cent over last year and has increased 70 per cent over the year before last."

"This, Washington has not kept pace with the other cities with which it is linked in air commerce. It is estimated that some 400,000 passengers a year now enter or leave Washington by transport planes. With the new national airport ready for service on July 4 next, it is safe to predict that the air traffic into and out of this city will reach a much larger volume and our National Capital will be able to take her rightful place alongside the other great traffic centers of the country."

Col. Smith said that the airport at Gravelly Point would be as good as any in the country, if not better.

Slides Shown
Col. Smith, and also Mr. Ryan, gave credit for this pre-schedule feat to Col. R. S. Thomas and his aides in the Army Engineers Corps, who have been in charge of the fill.

Col. Smith used lantern slides to give Board of Trade members an idea of how the airport project had come along and what it will look like when completed.

No airport in the world will be so close to the heart of a big city—only 6 minutes drive from Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, "observing all red lights." Consequently, the airport is expected to attract a record number of visitors, and he told of the provisions that were being made for the parking of their cars.

He said that operators of restaurants at other airports had offered to invest as much as $200,000 in the public dining room at the Gravelly Point Airport, provided accommodations were made for 600 to 800 customers.

Wright Flight Recalled
Col. Smith's pictures indicated that the air passenger, arriving at Gravelly Point, would have a magnificent view of the city, with the Washington Monument in the foreground.

Capt. William J. Tate, 70-year-old veteran of the Lighthouse Service, regaled the audience with stories about the history-making flights of the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk, N. C., in 1903. He was their host when they first arrived at the sand dunes in 1900.

He said that the people around Kitty Hawk, convinced that God would have put wings on a man if He had wanted him to fly, believed that the Wrights were unbalanced. "Don't put your ignorance against their egotism," Capt. Tate said he told them.

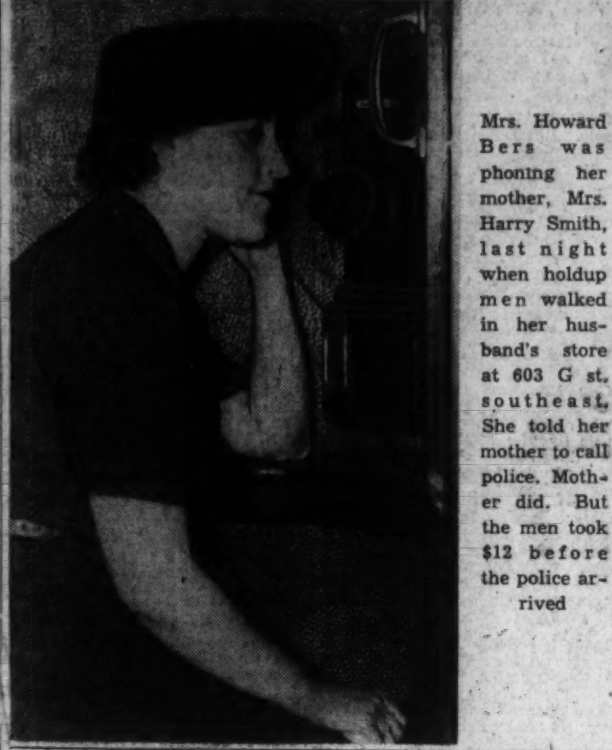

"Bill, you are a damn sight crazier than they are," he quoted them as saying in reply.

William F. McCracken, chairman of the Board of Trade's aviation committee, recalled the "garden patch" of an airport that Washington had 13 years ago when a service was started between here and Philadelphia. He was then Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of aviation, and took a deep interest in the local situation.

However, Mr. McCracken said that the man who deserved most credit in the fight for an airport at Gravelly Point was Lawrence E. Williams, who, as first chairman of the board's aviation committee, urged selection of that site. Mr. Williams now is president of the board of trade.

At the outset of last night's meeting, David Colladay, chairman of a subcommittee that made a survey of Washington's air defenses, made a report.

'Mother, We're Being Robbed'

Symphony Eats Bread, Cheese On Milk Train in Catskills

Stop at Country Store Only Chance to Get Food on Way to Binghamton Concert; Musicians Cut Viands With Reed Knives

By John Chabot Smith
Post Staff Writer

Binghamton, N. Y., Dec. 14.—A wayside grocery store in a hamlet in the Catskill Mountains sold a winter's supply of bread and cheese this afternoon, to save the National Symphony Orchestra from starving in the wilderness.

Only 150 miles of railroad track separate here and Kingston, N. Y., but the "Symphony Special" took more than eight hours to make the trip. The musicians' two special cars climbed from Kingston to Oneonta in the company of a score of milk tankers and three locomotives, but no dining car; and the lunch hour that was to have been spent in Oneonta was lost somewhere among the mountain dairies.

The players boarded their train at 7:45 a. m., flipped their pasteboards and read their magazines for five hours while the long train chugged through the snow-laden forests and ski-slopes, gathering milk tankers as it went. At half-past 12, with Oneonta still two hours ahead, the brakeman was approached for advice.

No sign of civilization beyond railway postoffices and sidings had been seen all morning; but the brakeman remembered a grocery store three stops ahead within a few yards of the station. The hungry musicians made their plans: Seven kinds of cheese and cooked meats, milk, butter and sausage would make a possible picnic lunch to stay them till they reached Oneonta.

A half-hour later manager, conductor and a dozen musicians descended on the storekeeper, while a local customer looked on in dismay. Bread and store cheese she had nuts, tangerines, grapes, cakes and cookies, canned beans, three kinds of sandwich spread, but nothing more on the list.

The foragers took what they could get, piled back into the train and opened a delicatessen shop. The string-players' penknives opened the cans, the woodwinds cut the cheese with the broad knives made for shaping their reeds. Suitcases became tables, newspapers plates, and the floor was littered with nut-shells.

The train finally pulled into Oneonta just in time to drop its milk tankers, change engines, and set off again for Binghamton, a downhill journey accomplished in the scheduled two hours. Here the orchestra will play the final concert of the tour, leaving immediately afterwards by night train for Washington.

Spirited Performance
Last night at Kingston, N. Y., Erno Balogh and the orchestra gave a spirited performance of the Liszt piano concerto No. 2, before an audience somewhat diminished by the bad weather.

The concert was played in the Municipal Auditorium, a vast hall used at other times as a ball room and gymnasium. It was sponsored by the local community concert service, which draws more than 1,100 members from the town of 23,000 and surrounding mountain villages. Many were unable to reach the town over roads made impassable by the heavy snowfall.

The audience made up for its small numbers with the warmth of applause, demanding the encores. The concert was won, and the orchestra played the Goldmark "Sakuntala" overture and Beethoven's majestic fifth symphony.

Last Night With Citizens Associations

American University Park

A protest against an increase in taxes in the American University Park area without equivalent improvement was voiced in a resolution to the District tax assessor last night at a meeting of the American University Park Citizens Association. The resolution pointed out that there has been a 100 per cent increase in assessments.

The American University Glee Club sang at the opening of the meeting which was held in Hurst Hall on the campus. The group went on to request additional street lights on Fort drive at the rear of Woodrow Wilson High School.

A 12-pound turkey was given as a door prize to Paul Berry.

Congress Heights

A community health clinic to operate under the direction of the Congress Heights Citizens Association was proposed at a meeting of the association last night in the Eleventh Precinct Station. J. Louis Gelman, president, named Mrs. Maude Liebrand chairman of a committee to study a plan for a clinic. Other members appointed to the committee are Benson Taylor, J. M. McDonald and Miss Hazel Young.

Henry Tilton, of the D. C. Suffrage Association, advocated local and national representation for residents of the District of Columbia, in the principal address of the meeting.

Connecticut Ave. Citizens

Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association members, meeting in All Souls' Church last night, requested present bus service along Connecticut avenue. The number of buses now running over the thoroughfare, particularly during the rush hour, was described as wholly inadequate.

A resolution was adopted opposing a pending congressional bill to increase the tax on gasoline. W. H. Mondell, of the D. C. Suffrage Association, addressed the members.

Vote on Home Relations Body Delayed

Bar Defers Action on Commission to Speed Temporary Alimony And Child Care

After three hours of turbulent and sometimes acrimonious debate, the District Bar Association voted last night in special meeting at the Mayflower Hotel to recommit for further study the question of striving for a commission to speed temporary alimony and child care in domestic relations cases.

Sefton Durr, association president, had warned that failure to adopt some remedial measure likely would prevent action on necessary legislation at the coming session of Congress.

The association's final decision was on motion of George D. Hornung, Jr., to send the question back to its committee on procedure in domestic relations cases "for a factual study especially with respect to needs peculiar to the District." Under the motion, the committee also will study means of securing the ends desired, whether by legislation or by change in court rules.

System Explained

The committee's majority report, which recommended establishment by law of a domestic relations commissioner and staff to "assist the court in the disposition of preliminary and supplementary proceedings in domestic relations cases," was explained by H. Winship Wheatley, Jr., committee chairman. The commissioner, under the majority resolution, also would "have powers of investigation and recommendation."

Views of the minority, composed of three members of the 12-man committee, were explained by Jean M. Boardman, who declared conditions in the District were different from those in other cities which had adopted the system. "In any one of the four grounds for divorce here—adultery, two years desertion, five years separation or conviction of a felony—the question of temporary alimony or custody of children, he said, does not arise."

An amendment by Henry I. Quinn to the majority report that the committee appointed to draft legislation creating the proposed commissioner submit its findings to the District Court judges for approval brought a strenuous attack on both amendment and majority report by Julius I. Peyer. Much had been said about the apparent success of the system in Detroit, which last year appropriated $187,000 to maintain a staff of 53 in the work.

'Already Over-Socialized'

"Probably the reason Detroit wishes to continue the system," said Peyer, "because it gives 37 politicians jobs."

"The trouble here in the past 10 years," turning to Quinn's motion, "has been that we have been afraid to express ourselves because some judge might dislike it. Judges do things every day we don't like and I'm tired of catering to their whims for the purpose of trying to obtain from them certain favors."

"We are already oversocialized"—going back again to the commission question—"we have too many welfare organizations where men and women are doing too much book work and card filing and social work, and practical work is opposed to these short-haired women and long-haired men going to people's houses and peering through the keyhole to see what they are doing."

Likewise opposed to referring the drafting committee's work to the court for approval, Lawrence Koenigsberger declared, "This is not a situation connected by starchy-eyed dreamers but a practical situation which has been put up to us for solution. A judge of experience comes down from the bench to ask for our help, which we are trying to give. No one desires to adopt the Detroit system lock, stock and barrel; should have a law, general in form, to be interpreted by the court, flexible enough to meet special conditions here and to encompass changes that may arise."

Cost Estimated $10,000
He said adoption of the commission plan would not entail added expense but would save money in the end, "if present court congestion keeps up we will need two more judges who, with their staffs will cost at least $20,000 each."

Hornung's motion was adopted after the majority report, the minority report, Quinn's amendment and a resolution by James C. Wilkes favoring appointment by the District Court of a commissioner all had been defeated. A motion which would, under parliamentary procedure, have tabled all measures before the meeting was defeated by the narrow margin of 52 to 46.

The committee which investigated the commission system and filed the majority report included, besides Wheatley and Koenigsberger, Irwin Geiger, Hyman M. Goldstein, Philip Goldstein, Al Philip Kane, George Monk, Louis Ottenberg, John J. Sirica and H. Winship Wheatley, Jr. The minority was signed by Boardman, Raymond Neudecker and Lewis H. Shapiro.

Night School's Turkey Dinner Tasty Bargain

A turkey dinner, complete with minis and demitasse, last night was served to 26 persons at a cost of $7.43 by the night school class of McKinley High School, Second and T streets northeast.

"The dinner was given to demonstrate that the class can plan, buy and give a formal dinner," explained Mrs. Nellie Davidson, assistant in adult home education. Popcorn favors and the decorations were made by the 21 pupils enrolled in the class, Miss Emma T. Watts, teacher of the food course, said.

Holding up a "snowman" made of popcorn, she asserted, "these things would be pretty expensive if bought in a store, but they cost practically nothing to make."

The menu included: Hot grapefruit in brown sugar; Roast turkey with stuffing; Broccoli and candied sweet potatoes; Cranberry salad with beets and red cabbage.

Individual pumpkin pie. Coffee. Decorative minis and fruit cake.

Guests at the dinner were Dr. Harold Benjamin, dean of education, Maryland University, and Mrs. Benjamin; Mrs. Ola Day Rush, head of the District Home Economics Department, and Lee Rush; Frank Rolston, principal of McKinley High School night courses, and Mrs. Rolston; Jess Davidson; E. J. Lockwood, director of District night schools, and Mrs. Lockwood.

Class members, who were "host and hostess," were Morris Cohen and Mrs. Teresa Jones. Besides Mrs. Davidson, Miss Watts and the party at the table, 13 members of the class also had dinner.

Miss Elinor Forsyth, of 1610 Sixteenth street northwest, a class member who is to be married shortly, was the honor guest at a shower at the conclusion of the "dinner party."

2 Burned, Helper Saves Worker in Gas Station Fire

A man was saved by a coworker yesterday when fire followed an explosion at a gasoline station in the first block of M street southeast. Another man was burned, by Fred Russell, Romeo Stallabotto, 27, of 505 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was cleaning a washroom with gasoline when fumes burst into flames, trapping him in the small room. He was dragged to safety, after his face, arms and chest were badly burned, by Fred Russell, colored, of 1726 Sixth street northwest, a helper.

A third man, Michael Balmarozzo, 26, of 22 L street northeast, was burned on the hands and face when he attempted to beat out the flames.

Dope Squads Trap 12 in Night Raids

Local and Federal agents, joining forces last night, engaged in a night-long narcotics clean-up.

Early this morning 12 persons were under arrest as a result of the raiding, and several more were expected to be apprehended before the squadmen finished their night's work.

A large quantity of heroin, and numerous articles of stolen property were seized.

Four colored women and eight colored men, wearing arrested by the squadmen in the early raids. Among the addresses raided were houses in the first and the 1400 block of R street northwest, the 1200 block of One-half street southeast and two houses in the 1900 block of Temperance Court northwest.

Engaged in the raids were the entire force of the Metropolitan Police pickup squad, and all Federal agents in the Fourth National District, numbering in all at least a dozen agents.

Several of the arrested suspect confessed to stealing property to raise money for buying dope. Having become addicts, they said they lacked money to buy dope. Among the stolen articles were several portable radios and two revolvers.

While last night's raiding was reported by police as part of their regular anti-narcotics activity, the all-night drive was considered one of the most extensive undertaken in several months.

K. of C. Santa Passes Out Turkeys at Party

Each of 60 members of K. of C. Council 353 of the Knights of Columbus who last night attended a Christmas party at the Council Hall 900 block Tenth street northwest received a Christmas gift. A dozen turkeys and numerous other gifts were handed out by an uncostumed Santa Claus in the person of a ticket taker.

Students Hiss As Browder Assails Finns

'Refused to Guarantee Leningrad,' He Says, Amid Near-Riot

By the Associated Press
Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 14.—Speaking in a lecture hall not completely freed of the rank odor of a makeshift "stench bomb," Communist Leader Earl Browder told more than 800 Massachusetts Institute of Technology students today that the League of Nations had "been from the tomb" only because its action meant "preparation for the holy war" against Russia.

Door windows were broken and a few shins were lacerated in skirmishes as large numbers of youth tried to enter the hall after it was filled.

Those on the outside banged on doors, cheered, yelled and rang bells throughout the Communist leader's address.

Students inside cheered and whistled at his reference to the League, which today expelled Russia from membership.

They hissed and jeered as he referred to Russia in terms of Finland as necessary because Finland "refused to guarantee the safety of Leningrad."

They yelled, laughed, whistled and cheered at his reference to "universities which I need not name," which had banned him as "a matter of good taste," and at his characterization of Yale's granting him a speaking privilege as "adherence to the Bill of Rights."

(Harvard—less than 2 miles away—Dartmouth, and Princeton, withheld permission for him to address students.)

Undergraduates and a sprinkling of faculty members filled the lecture hall in M. I. T.'s main building an hour before Browder arrived.

About a half hour before the meeting opened, the odor of a "stench bomb" permeated the lecture hall and nearby corridors.

Student chemists described it as "some sort of a sulphuric combination."

Cathedral School To Present Annual Christmas Event

The National Cathedral Elementary School will give its annual Christmas program at 11 a. m. Wednesday in the nursery school building, with the carol "Silent Night," sung in Norwegian, English and German.

This program, as in former years, is the outgrowth of the pupils' work in their music classes under the direction of Miss Lillian Willse. The songs will center about two Christmas themes, the fun of the tree and the Nativity.

"Silent Night" will be sung in Norwegian by Marjorie Morgenstern; in German by Jacqueline de Bruyn; and in English by the entire school. Mary will be portrayed by Anne Clague; Joseph by Robert Bradner; an angel by Lily Ryan; the three kings by Richard Ridgeway, Jonathan Lindley and Cornelia Bingham; and the shepherds by Keister White, Susan Vance, Joy Elliott and Joseph Levy.

College Opens Hosiery Mill to Give Students Jobs

Athens, Ala., Dec. 14 (AP).—Athens College launched an experiment in today when ground was broken for the first unit of a silk hosiery mill to be operated by college girls.

The first unit, to cost approximately $50,000 and scheduled for completion next spring, will provide jobs for 100 students. Three additional units are planned in 1943, each to add 100 jobs.

Students will be paid 25 cents per hour for the first 480 hours and 30 cents for the next 480, with both "training" periods to be completed the first school year. The wage for the second, third and fourth years will be 40 cents per hour. The product will be sold on a contract basis.

Fruit Men Confer On Pest Control

Easton, Md., Dec. 14 (AP).—Measures to combat the codling moth, whose larvae bring costly damage to fruits, were discussed today at the second session of the fifty-third annual meeting of the Peninsula Horticultural Society.

Discussing the problems were L. A. Stearns, University of Delaware entomologist; W. S. Hough, Winchester, Va.; Dr. E. N. Corey, University of Maryland entomologist; and H. S. McConnell and C. Graham, his associates.

J. E. Lippincott, of Colorado; J. M. Mylburn, of Elkton; and Lloyd Beiderston, of Calcutta, carried off top honors in the apple display.

This Kind of Fun May Be Costly to Plumber's Helper

A 20-year-old man who, "just for the fun of it," stole an automobile, smashed a liquor store window and drove into Maryland for a mental black-out was in police custody last night. Held for investigation, the man was arrested by Silver Spring authorities about 8 a. m. yesterday. He was found unconscious in a parked automobile on the Coleville pike. The automobile had been reported stolen by Ernest Gogorza, 1241 Mintwood place northwest.

The prisoner confessed, police said, that he took Gogorza's automobile, at thirty-fourth and N streets northwest, and then drove into Maryland. He said he was a plumber's helper.

Congressmen Say U. S. Lags In Air Defense

Committee, Home After 14,000-Mile Tour, Will Urge Action

By John G. Norris

Winding up a 14,000-mile tour of key defense posts, a joint Congressional committee reported yesterday that American defense against air attack is being neglected and urged that immediate steps be taken to correct this situation.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, ranking member, said the 16-man body, representing the Senate and House Military and Appropriations committees, had formed a number of conclusions regarding deficiencies in the Nation's armaments and expected to present five specific recommendations to Congress in January.

Ground Forces Outstripped

The group concludes after a number of informal conferences, he said, that the development of the ground fighting arms is lagging behind the Air Corps, and that Army units should be grouped in large units for training, and small posts be abandoned in favor of much larger military reservations.

Thomas said the body's specific recommendations probably would be:

That special and immediate attention should be given to defensive measures against possible enemy air attack; and to that end the best possible anti-aircraft gun, rifles and weapons generally should be developed and placed in the hands of specially trained units.

That the production of semi-automatic rifles be speeded up to the end that the infantry and Cavalry may be provided with the best gun possible to produce.

That our small Field Artillery should be modernized for greater range and mobility; and that new mobile cannon should be standardized and a production program initiated.

That approved airports be expanded or new airports obtained to accommodate the large planes now being manufactured.

That large tracts of land be provided for the training of large groups of soldiers including Army corps with all the related troops.

Largest Army Not Goal

Opinion among the group, Thomas said, seems to be unanimous that the United States should not attempt to have the largest Army, but we "should concentrate our efforts in developing the most effective and the best army in the world."

The program of land procurement to provide large training areas should be initiated at once, the group urged.

Members of the inspection body included: Senators Schwartz, of Wyoming; Truman, of Missouri; Minton, of Indiana; Chavez, of New Mexico; Democrats, and Gurney, of South Dakota; Republican Representatives May, of Kentucky; Terry, of Arkansas; Costello, of California; Sparkman, of Alabama; Thomason, of Texas; Overton, of Louisiana; and Bryan, of Maryland. Democrats and Clason, of Massachusetts; Shafer, of Michigan, and Martin, of Iowa, Republicans.

TENOR FROM CATHAY. Joe Fong, the noted Chinese tenor, will star in next week's show in the Shoreham Blue Room. He's sung all up and down the West Coast, comes to Washington directly from Chicago. So chalk up another add to the high score of Shoreham's amusement manager, Max Lowe, a real Nimrod among the talent hunters. New, too, are Anthony Digges and Francene Joy, who mix funning with their dancing, and Morgan and Randall, the monosied (or maniacal) ambassadors.

ALL IN FUN. Pull Mail Room. That midnight "Off to the Races" session, with the guests riding little hobby horses and nine out of ten of them taking more lumps than the Duke of Windsor did when he was Prince of Wales.

Troika. Jolly and elderly Dr. Walter Eddy (yes, the Dr. Eddy who writes for Good Housekeeping), leading his big party in an impromptu game of "London Bridge is Falling Down." First time we ever saw that variety of cutting-up in a night spot. But not the last, we hope.

Lounge Riviera. That double portion of prettiness, Debutante Billie Byrd West, and Howard Biez practicing a very intricate version of the tango, hardly getting tangled at all. If they keep that up they'll be ready for a floor show soon.

Pirates' Den. The bartenders playing a tune on their bottles and objecting to drink orders as tending to get their glass music out of kilter. Sand one esquire, "you just give me a glass of bourbon and you'll be in better tune."

Lotus. Magini doing tricks with cards the size of magazine covers and remarking doily, "I feel as though I were shuffling window panes."

NO CAN DO. Gracie Shannon, of the Neptune Room, is the composer of the useful "I Thought I Had to Die to Go to Heaven," but she can't play it. Yes, a New York publishing company has contracted for the number and no one, not even Gracie, can play it until it's released.

NEW YEAR IN EXTENSIO. Long distance New Year's celebrations will be staged in the Mayfair in New York and the Del Rio at Elanburg. Mayfair, usually closed on Sunday, will open at 5 in the afternoon on December 31 and not close until 2 a. m. next morning.

ESQUIRE. Among the town's best dressed entertainers are Anchor Room's Matt Windsor and Arthur Todd of the King Cole Room. The other day Matt was all done up in a dark grey suit with red figured cravat and a dark red feather carnation in his buttonhole. Arthur goes in for these very swanky double-breasted suits.

SNACKING. Picking up tasty tid-bits is one of the prize diversions of any well-regulated cocktail hour. In the Mayflower Lounge you'll find piping hot little biscuits with country sausages baked inside of them. At the Madrilion folks gorge themselves on crackers topped with hot melted cheese, also those sizzling little fish balls. In Shar-Zad the chef does himself proud with tiny puff-paste patties filled with creamed oysters. And the waiters are always passing around trays of giant shrimps to be dipped in cocktail sauce.

MUSICIANS' OPEN HOUSE. The Society of Modern Music will hold its first open house party Monday night in its new club rooms over Dick's Grill, says Secretary Carl Merman. We're looking forward to a "jam session" de luxe. Don't take that "open house" too literally. If you want to go to the party, you'll have to get an invitation from a member of the S. M. M.

"MATRIMONIAL MORTALITY" is sure high among night club singers, said the Rainbow Room's Milton Davis who is currently bemoaning himself because canary Lyde Swygert will soon leave Rainbow to marry Harry Allen, trumpeter. Musicians seem to be responsible for this state of affairs. Because Rainbow's former Ginger Lee left to be wed to Carl Genzel, trombonist at the Earle. And Madrilion's Helen Forrest was wed to Al Spiel, drummer. And Libby Frazier left the Hi Hat to be the bride of Pianist Howard Hophan.

Anthony Digges and Francene Joy, who'll prance in the Shoreham Blue Room next week will be the next wife of Herbert Marshall of the motion pictures. All they're waiting for is the handing down of the final decree divorcing Herbert from Edna Best. Eddy, my li'l lassies, is now totally unattached.

HI HAT CHANGES are in the offing. But not until after the first of 1940 when you may expect a lot of new talent to come rolling along. In the meantime Hi Hat continues to be packed with folks who apparently just can't get along unless they hear Jack Manning, Al Lewis and Carmela Lazzari sing every day.

Eagles Seek Fifth in Row Against Skeeters Tonight

Locals Trail Rovers by Single Point

Mackenzie Warns Squad of Upset in Drive to Overtake League Leaders

Their fifth straight victory and another step in the drive for the lead in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League will be the goal of the Washington Eagles tonight at 8:30 when they clash with the last place Jersey Skeeters of River Vale in Riverdale Stadium.

While the ice-setting New York Rovers are battling with Atlantic City's Sea Gulls in Atlantic City, the Eagles will be taking the first step in their "build-up" to Tuesday night's crucial contest with the league leaders, which will benefit The Washington Post's Neely Family Fund.

Trailing the Rovers by just one point, the Eagles go to Atlantic City tomorrow night to meet the Gulls and then return for a rest before the game which may see them take over the top spot in the Eastern amateur circuit.

Pessimistic yesterday last his squad become overconfident, Coach Redvers Mackenzie warned that the Skeeters are in an ideal spot to furnish an upset.

"You never can take anything for granted in ice hockey," he said. "If we play up to the form expected, we should be leading the league by early next week. If not we will have only ourselves to blame. But the Skeeters have an experienced and rugged line-up and will be fighting for all they're worth to beat us."

Washington has taken two games out of three with River Vale. The Eastern League's tenth ranking scorer, Roy Covert, will be the Eagles' big gun for a third victory tonight, while the main thrust they expect to face is the Skeeters' "Ding Dong" Bell—generally known as the league's second ranking "bad boy." Bell has spent 29 minutes in the penalty box.

The local team is favored by its schedule of three games in five days over the Rovers, who are playing four games in the same period. The Rovers will run up against the Baltimore Orioles Sunday afternoon in Madison Square Garden for their third game in as many days.

Hein, Don Hutson, Green Bay end; Dan Fortmann, Bears guard, and Joe Stydahar, Bears tackle, were the four players who repeated their 1938 performances. Hutson, who holds or shares every rushing record on the books, received 43 points, the highest individual vote in the balloting. Fortmann, with 37 points, was second in the poll, while Hein and Stydahar were tied for third with 36 points each.

The naming of O'Brien and Osmanski marked the first time that more than one rookie was named to the first team. O'Brien broke three league records in forward passing in his first year, continuing the fine performances he inaugurated at Texas Christian where he wound up his career as the outstanding college player in the country in 1938. Osmanski, leading ground gainer of the league, replaced Clarke Hinkle, Green Bay, who had been named fullback for the previous three campaigns. Hinkle failed to make the second team this year, being shaded for the post by John Drake, Cleveland.

Other first team nominations were Andy Farkas, leading scorer of the league, at halfback; and Jim Barber, at tackle. Both are Washington players. Farkas, in scoring 68 points, set a league record of 11 touchdowns, and also caught a pass from Frank Filchock for a 99-yard touchdown gain, also a new record.

On Hunting

Almost daily we are questioned about where to go for good shooting, particularly for upland game, and very often our answer can hardly be termed satisfactory. For the simple reason that to publicize any particular small area means the destruction of that area as far as game is concerned.

Unlike fishing, where you can "eat your cake and keep it too," once you bring game over the gun sights and pull the trigger, that much of your sport is gone forever.

So, to those unacquainted with this section, our usual recommendation is one of the hunting preserves open to the public for a small fee or one of the hunting clubs. The best bet for the sportsman who finds the going too hard for a restricted preserve is the fee system, where he pays a small cover charge and so much additional for each bird or piece of game he shoots.

Hunters Get Return

We believe this way of paying for the sport applies more to Virginia than any other nearby State, for with many counties closing and restricting their seasons on account of a shortage of birds, and the Commonwealth doing little or nothing about it, it is the only possible way for the average hunter to get an equitable return for his sports dollar.

The Powell Game Farm at Louisa, Va., works on the fee system, taking the stand the sportsman should not pay rent for the land he never uses, or for liberated birds he never sees. It has selected as the best choice of all birds, the Mongolian pheasant, first because it is the game of all upland game birds, being surpassed only by the wild turkey in size, and leading the field in colorful plumage, and second, because one pheasant is equal to about seven quail in food value. The hunter shooting pheasants is always shooting above par.

Rules Are Simple

Parties must have appointments for the days they wish to shoot, and singles may be asked to join another small party. Shot smaller than No. 6 is not permitted. Neither are flushing or chasing dogs. Well-trained ones are welcome any time, and a good quail dog is a good pheasant dog.

The service charge, which includes the services of guide, carrier and well-trained dogs, is $3 a gun a day. Each pheasant bagged is $2. Meals are 50 cents and rooms $1, although one may stay at the hotel in town if it is preferred.

Could anyone ask for more, when it is guaranteed that he will find and flush birds within shooting range? The season is open now, and will remain so until January 20, 1940.

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase Iles shot off 26 turkeys last Sunday at their second turkey shoot of the season out on the Rockville pike, in spite of the fact that it was over before many of them received their notices.

This coming week end will find the big birds going to those with the best scores at almost every crossroads. The Twelfth Precinct Pistol Club will hold theirs on the range at Terra Cotta. The Bethesda Firemen at Miller Field on Bethesda avenue.

That the extended good weather has put a decided crimp in the wildfowl shooting in North Carolina there is no doubt. Every week local hunters fare forth with high hopes, thinking the breaks are about due and the going will be good, but nevertheless returning empty-handed and heavy-hearted.

High School Double-Header Slated Tonight

St. John's, Anacostia Clash in Opener; Gonzaga Plays Wilson

Later in the season they'll be at each others' throats, as usual, but tonight St. John's and Gonzaga join hands in promoting the first high school basketball doubleheader of the season at Tech gym.

The Johnnies face off with Anacostia High in the opener at 7:30 and immediately following Gonzaga meets one of the brightest prospects among public school squads, Woodrow Wilson. Because St. John's will be taking its first cage step of the season, its engagement with the Indians will be more or less a toss-up. Gonzaga and Wilson have both turned in impressive victories in early starts, the Purple over Mt. Rainier and Wilson over American University junior varsity and Baltimore City College.

The twin bill, staged on the same principle which prompts double-headers in Madison Square Garden—that "the best ball comes in double doses," caps a day of scholastic activity in which a total of eight games will be played. In other night games, Tech takes a short hop to Bethesda to meet Coach Allan Vogt's boys, Montgomery Blair High plays host to Fairfax and Laurel is entertained by Rockville. All contests start at 8 p. m.

Afternoon clashes bring together Washington-Lee and Western, in Georgetown; York Collegiate Institute and Central, at Central; and Roosevelt at Baltimore City College. Four of the above teams—Roosevelt, Tech, St. John's and Blair—will be seeing their first formal competition of the season.

'Sad Sam' Jones Returns to Baseball

Woodstock, Ohio, Dec. 14 (AP)—"Sad Sam" Jones, who pitched for six American League Clubs before retiring in 1935 after 22 years under the big top, is returning to baseball. The Monroe County veteran, who has spent the last several summers coaching the Woodstock Junior Merchants, said today he had been signed as a coach-player by the Toronto Club of the International League.

During his big league days "Sad Sam" appeared with all American League clubs, with the exception of Philadelphia and Chicago.

DON'T Save for a Rainy Day!

Wear these "Stout Fellahs"

in stormy weather, of course, because they're specially weatherproofed to keep your feet warm and dry. But—and here is the beauty of them—these are not explorers' clump-clumpers. They are handsome shoes, dressy—smart to wear on fine days with your best business clothes. This double life that "Stout Fellahs" lead makes them the shoes to buy right now. Note, too, that they're way underpriced in relation to today's up-zooming leather market.

One of the softest ways yet devised by man to earn a living is acting in the 15-minute radio serials that dot the stations during the early afternoon hours. The pay is beautiful and you just can't beat the hours.

But one of the finest of the serial lads, one Bill Adams, is now slowly recovering from a harrowing period. Bill is the hero of the "Your Family and Mine," daily 2:30 feature on WJVS.

Bill was just another actor, eating with satisfactory regularity, but otherwise undistinguished, when a bright sponsor suddenly realized his voice was an almost perfect imitation of another fairly successful radio personality—Franklin Delano Roosevelt, a local resident.

It took very little polishing to fix Perry's voice so that Mr. Farley couldn't tell the difference. And when the distinguished Groton accent began telling of the beauties of some product or other the response was immediate—and unfavorable.

Bill struggled along for a while and finally, to his intense satisfaction, his Roosevelt-minded sponsor called it a day. But poor Bill's voice had taken on a deep F. D. R. tinge.

While this struggle was going along, Perry was continuing to appear in "Your Family and Mine." In this serial the Roosevelt tones were not so noticeable, but still there. Perry, determined to lose them for all time, experimented and practiced until his vocal chords had completely lost the F. D. R. quiver. His sponsor was thereupon set upon by irate followers of "Your Family and Mine," who wanted to know why such a fine actor as Mr. Perry was being replaced. This furor eventually died a natural death and today we find Perry happily going his way in "Your Family and Mine." Incidentally, "Your Family and Mine" is big league radio entertainment. Try it at 1:40 some afternoon at 2:30.

upon the adversary's discard not attempted to avoid a possible losing finesse; he would have thought a great deal less, planned not at all, and would have succeeded in winning 10 tricks for his four-spade contract with ease.

The credit for defeating the hand goes to East, who reasoned that only a swindle would set it. His reasoning is explained by John C. Stabile, of Seattle, in a recent issue of "The Bridge World."

He says: "West led the heart king and the heart four was played from North. East saw that no switch seemed desirable and that the contract appeared bullet-proof. He therefore made the deceptive come-on signal of the heart nine. West continued with the heart ace and East completed the echo with the heart three. The third round of hearts was led and after a little consideration, declarer played the heart ten from dummy and East took home his heart jack. Later the declarer lost a trump trick.

The steal would not have succeeded except for the fact that declarer feared he might have to lose a diamond trick, and felt that it would be wise to take what seemed to be a proved finesse, and thus establish the heart queen for a diamond discard."

The DOCTOR by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chapter 13

ANNE lay for a long time alone in her bed that night. She was still awake when Stanton came in, and instantly alert when he mentioned Jerry Ames.

"It looks as though Beverly has come to her senses," he said, looking down at her, as was his habit, without seeing her at all.

"She stirred uneasily. 'I don't think so. I don't know, of course. I doubt if she will ever marry him.'"

"What does she want in a husband anyhow? She encouraged him for months."

"I don't think she cares for him," "Care" he said scornfully. "Lot of romantic tosh. What she needs is a home of her own and a baby or two. Ames is a good-looking young fellow. What's the matter with him anyway?"

Lying back on her pillows, she surveyed him. He had been the center of her life for a long time. She had watched him grow from a sensitive, ambitious underling to his present state, and had seen him hardening under the process. It was she who had paid the price for his success, she reflected. And then she had lost him. He had lost her, too, although he probably did not know that or care.

"She's in a curious mood these days," she said quietly. "I think she liked this young Arden, and for some reason or other they have quarreled. I don't know what it was about."

But Stanton Lewis knew, and reflected grimly that this was the source of Beverly's information. He said nothing, however, and Anne went on:

"It's all rather tragic, for of course he won't marry her. He's too proud, for one thing, and he's too poor. It will be years before he can support a wife."

"More romantic drivel!" he said dryly as he prepared to go. "Men are heroic about everything but money. I notice he took the city job fast enough when O'Neill offered it to him."

So he knew that, too. He knew everything. He frightened her sometimes by the things he knew. "It's just possible," she said, watching him, "that he took it because he knew you had nothing to do with it. Otherwise—"

He started at her. "Otherwise what?" he demanded.

She had made a slip, and she knew it. "Otherwise I doubt if he would have taken it," she finished.

"I gather that he doesn't approve of any of us, and that he blames you for a number of things. Probably you know what they are."

He moved rather pompously to the door. It occurred to her then that he was rather a grotesque figure and that it did not really matter that he had not loved her for years.

"So that's what the matter with her," he said slowly. "That young fool's been talking to her. And now she wants to marry him! Isn't that it?"

But suddenly she felt very tired. She wanted to be alone with her book and the window raised and the cool night air blowing in.

"I don't know," she said wearily. "She listens for the telephone, but I don't think he's called her. I suppose he's busy."

He went out then, banging the door behind him, and she smiled. It infuriated him, she knew, that anything belonging to him should not be desirable, and it gratified her now and then to get under his guard and pierce the hard shell of his complacency.

She shivered and, lying back, felt carefully the hard lump in her right breast. It had been there for a long time now, not particularly painful as yet, still to be concealed; but there, never to be forgotten. She lay for a long time after she had put out the light, making her quiet self-contained plans.

CHRIS ARDEN never knew of that discussion, although he read rather grimly about the party in the paper the next day. It was at that time that he took over the city work, and his first view of it was not encouraging. The department of health was still housed on a bystreet in a small, two-story brick building, a block or so from the Municipal Building; and the department itself was the foothill of local politics. To come the poor of the city, ready to sell their allegiance and their votes for a loaf of coal, a weekly grocery order, or a doctor in time of need. Men, women, and sometimes children, they came in through the dirty double doors and sat patiently on the hard wooden chairs until the gods behind the counter on the opposite side of the room were ready to hear their prayers.

Chris, walking in from the cold fresh air, was met by an atmosphere compounded of unwashed bodies and old clothes. The line of waiters on the chairs did not so much as look at him, but a fat man named Jenkins who dealt out the blessings balled him with the hearty voice of comradeship.

"Hello," he said. "You're the new doc, aren't you?"

"I am. I don't know why."

The fat man grinned, rocking back and forth on his heels. "Pull it the word, son. Why am I here? Why are you there? Pull, my boy."

Chris glanced hastily at the row of chairs, their occupants now interested and listening. But they did not rise and smile at him, or Jenkins either. They smiled instead, for they, too, were there through pull of one kind or another of the job.

"I suppose I'm reporting for work," he said tentatively.

"And work's the word!" said Jenkins cheerfully. "Work's what we've got nothing else but. Say good-bye to a night's sleep from now on, Doc. These folks here make it a rule to be sick all day and send for the doctor at night. And as for babies—well, very few babies are born in the daytime."

"I suppose there is some sort of formula," said Chris. "I haven't an idea how one goes about this job."

"You'll learn, and you'll go about plenty," Jenkins assured him.

As Chris went out, after getting more detailed information, he was aware that the line-up on the hard chairs was eying him carefully, intently. Jenkins meant food and coal, but hereafter Chris might mean life or death to some of them. He felt heavy with responsibility.

He was surprised to find, that afternoon, that his waiting room looked like a section of the morning long-up of the Charles office. Women and children mostly, they filled the room to overflowing, and one or two of them stood in the hall. Katie, standing in the rear hall, was scowling and went back to leave his hat and coat.

"What's happened?" she demanded. "The whole place smells of them."

"Better get used to them, Katie. I'm a city physician now."

Later on he was to decide that that first day was the result of a pervious sense of humor on the part of Jenkins, for never again did the same thing happen. They came, of course, clutching their slips of paper from the Jenkins' order book, bringing their crying babies, using the upstairs bathroom, and in his absence allowing their small children to range the place and slide down the banisters. Lily took to locking her door at the back of the house, and as she usually mislaid the key, there were long delays in answering the doorbell. Katie wore an air of dignified resentment. But after that first day there was no small army crowding at his door.

As a matter of fact, he soon discovered that comparatively few came at all. The poor preferred sending for him to coming to him. He was busy. Busy as he never had known a man could be. He slept in snatches, ate irregularly. Lily, trailing in her eternal wrappers, would bring him a plate of dried inedible food.

"I tried to keep it warm, Doctor." Sometimes he was too tired to protest; once or twice he was moved to anger. But he was too busy and too weary those first days for much emotion of any sort. If he thought of Beverly at all, it was to feel ashamed and even sometimes to smile; but she was too remote from this new world of the slums for him to think of her often. Only at night, with Caesar asleep in the corner near the old-fashioned register in the floor, she sometimes came to him, no longer angry, but rather gentle and lovely, to soothe him to sleep and to lie in some warm secret corner of his heart.

EARLY DECEMBER then, with Chris working day and night, and his three months' service at the hospital soon to begin; with Lily despondent and slovenly; with Katie buying herself a pair of pearl earrings at the Five and Ten, and looking very pretty and almost mature in them; with Caesar growing fat and sleek by the kitchen stove while waiting, with the endless patience of all dogs, for his god to come back to him; and with Beverly Lewis, thinner than she should have been and rather quiet most of the time, once or twice on a free evening putting on her coat and taking Sandy for a walk down the hill and past the corner house with the small brass sign.

They never came to anything, those small, futile excursions of hers. Sometimes there would be a light in the office, however, and once she saw Chris' shadow plainly against the shade. She was tempted to ring the bell that night, to go in and tell him that he had been right and that she was sorry. She stood for a moment undecided. Then Katie opened the front door for some purpose or other, and Beverly, standing on the pavement, saw her for the first time. For just a moment they confronted each other, the two of them, but Beverly was in the dark, and Katie did not recognize her. The door closed again, and Beverly moved on, whistling to Sandy as she did so.

So that was Katie! And he had said she was a child. She told herself fiercely that night that she was nothing to her, but as she walked on she knew that she had the fatal faculty of making other men look small and purposeless; and that, whether she was in love with him or not, he had made it impossible for her to love any one else.

Chris, of course, knew nothing of all this. He worked to his limit, went to bed and was asleep almost instantly only, after an hour or two, to be roused by the telephone and to have to go out again. Katie he hardly noticed; certainly he never saw the earrings. She was about, after school hours, in and out, but she had become merely a part of the unsatisfactory background of his life. Now and then, however, she polished her instruments to-day.

"Fine. Thanks, Katie."

His matter-of-factness would disconcert her, but she persisted. He would come home on a Saturday to find the office furniture turned out into the hall and Katie, with a towel tied around her head and a broom in her hand, raising a dust which made him cough.

"The place is filthy, doctor."

And she would look at him with eyes like a dog's, pleading and humble.

She annoyed him, Lily drove him frantic. And in time even his pity for the poor began to wear and resentment. They lacked consideration, and too often they were dirty and generally shiftless. But he was paid to attend to these people, not to reform them.

There were times when death seemed to be a tangible thing to him, something to be fought less with drugs than by sheer willpower. He would not dare to relax. When, as happened once or twice, he dozed out of pure exhaustion, death crept up; then he would rouse, shake himself, and renew the battle.

"I'm going to die, doctor."

"Nonsense. We'll fight this out, a-1 win."

He did win sometimes. It never occurred to him that he was unconsciously drawing on anything but his life, and to remember some words of Bergman's a few months before he died.

"It took four years of medical college to kill my belief in any sort of God, and 40 years of practice to bring it back."

Chris seldom went to the hospital during that first month. Then one day he did go in, to find Nettie Simpson looking old and tired, and to realize that they represented the two ends of a long trail.

"I suppose you'll be coming on duty soon?" she said.

"I get a cold chill every time I think of it. Hands shake, too. Look at them!"

He grinned and held out his long surgeon's hands. To his immense surprise he found that they were unsteady, and he stared at them. "Must be smoking too much," he said sheepishly. "Been keeping up on coffee and tobacco. I'd better cut down a bit."

She eyed him, but she did not mention his hands.

"How is it going now? And what are you learning out of it all?"

"He was silent for a long minute. 'I hardly know yet. I'm sorry for them, if that's what you mean. When I fail, I suffer damnably, but I suppose I'll get over that.'"

"How are you living? Are you being looked after?"

"I'm all right. Not too good, not too bad."

It was probably, she thought, pretty bad; and in the end she made him tell her the story of his home life. She was thoughtful when he had finished.

"You can't go on indefinitely like this, Chris."

"No," he said. "No, I suppose not. But I happen to be God's gift to two women at the moment, and—" he smiled—"if you know any other answer, I don't."

"Can't the girl stop school and go to work?"

He stretched and got up. "I don't suppose that has entered her head," he said. "Rather a pretty head it is, too. No, the general idea seems to be that we carry on as is."

She sat still for a long time after he had gone. She was still sitting there when an assistant brought in a requisition slip, and she signed them absently.

Pretrial Unit Speeds D. C. Court Work

911 Cases Disposed Of So Far This Year, as Compared With 781 in 1938

Strengthened by the addition of new justices and modernized by application of informal procedure in the pretrial division, the District Court has cut deeply into its jam of delayed and other cases this year, term opened in October.

The court had disposed of 911 civil cases this year, the records showed at the close of business Wednesday, as compared with 781 cases disposed of at the end of December last year.

The cases settled this year include several dozen ended in the preliminary stages in the pretrial division. This procedure was initiated September 18, after nearly a year of preparation. Justice Laws studied the method from the bench in Detroit and other cities where it is functioning. The researchers also surveyed the work of such preliminary courts in England, where they have been established for years.

How System Works

Before the pretrial system was devised, parties to lawsuits went into court at odds on every issue of fact and law. The pretrial justice seeks to avert this, by talking over the case with lawyers for both sides in an informal manner. The lawyers are willing to speak freely before the pretrial court, because if nothing is agreed on, they will not be bound by what has been said when they go to court.

Thus Justice Laws will act for the defense counsel in a suit for personal injuries.

"You admit, don't you, that these X-ray pictures are the ones made of the plaintiff after the accident?" "Yes sir," the lawyer will reply.

"And you admit that these are the bills paid by the plaintiff for hospital treatment?" "Yes, there is no dispute about that."

Justice Laws then will initial the pictures and the bills and dictate a memorandum setting out the agreement. Both lawyers will sign it.

All this has taken about 3 minutes.

Needless Evidence Eliminated

Before the pretrial system, it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to bring to court the technician who made the pictures. He would have to swear to the circumstances of the picture taking and identify the pictures in court as the ones he made. The same would have been true of the hospital bills. This testimony would have taken about an hour.

This hour would have consumed the time of the following persons: The trial judge, 12 jurors, 1 court stenographer, at least 2 lawyers, 1 court clerk, 2 court marshals and possibly others. There would have been a great loss of time to the witness, who would have been summoned from their laboratories and hospitals and required to wait, perhaps for days, until called to the stand.

The Federal Diary U. S. Employees May Wear Political Party Buttons

Civil Service Commission Revises
And Publishes Regulations to Advise Workers of Things They Can't Do

By Alfred Friendly

Federal employees are no longer forbidden to wear campaign buttons of a political party or candidate.

This was stated in a bulletin on political activity of Government employees made public yesterday by the Civil Service Commission.

But the pamphlet otherwise contains the most stringent political prohibitions yet set forth by the commission.

Issued in anticipation of the 1940 elections, it was the first revision of the commission's declarations on the subject since August, 1936. In addition to previously existing bans on political activity, the document contains the prohibitions of the Hatch act passed last summer.

Effect of the recent law, the bulletin shows, is to extend the strict political bans already applying to classified Civil Service employees, to the remainder of Federal workers in exempted or non-classified positions.

Although the commission has withdrawn the ban against wearing campaign buttons, the classified Government employee is still barred from distributing badges or campaign literature; may not be connected with any political publication; may not write letters on political subjects for publication, and is even held responsible if such a letter is published against his consent.

In addition, he may not bet on elections, march in political parades nor play in a band that appears in a political parade at a rally or meeting. Specifically prohibited from helping to get out the vote on election day, he may not even give a friend a ride in his auto to the polls.

Although the right of petition to Congress or the Federal Government is guaranteed to the employee by the Constitution and Lloyd-La Follette act, he may not sign a petition to State, county and municipal governments, except as an individual, without reference to his Government connection.

According to the commission's interpretation, "regulation or suppression of the liquor traffic" is a political question and campaigning on the issue is prohibited. The employee may be a member, but not an officer, of a club, league or other organization taking part in such a campaign.

"The dissemination of temperance propaganda is permissible," the bulletin says, "but any endeavor for or against, the regulation, control or suppression of the liquor traffic through political agencies is prohibited."

A Federal employee may contribute voluntarily to a political cause or party, provided the funds do not go to a candidate for election or to another employee or officer of the Government. A Government employee may not be solicited by anyone for contributions, however, in any Government building, nor may a letter asking for such a contribution be sent to the employee's office. The commission has held that when such a letter is sent to an employee and the home address is omitted, with the result that the letter is delivered to the employee's office, the law has been violated.

The bulletin repeats a commission regulation that has been discussed in connection with recent agitation to remove from the Federal service employees belonging to or sympathizing with allegedly subversive political organizations.

The rule reads, "No discrimination shall be exercised, threatened or promised by any person in the executive civil service against or in favor of an applicant, eligible, or employee in the classified service because of his political or religious opinions or affiliations."

It also provides that no inquiry shall be made "concerning the opinions or affiliations, and all disclosures thereof shall be discounted."

The question that has been raised, and not yet settled, is whether this regulation forbids the dismissal of an employee who is a member of or sympathizer with any political party that is legally recognized, no matter how subversive its purposes are proved to be.

The bulletin will be disseminated to Government workers throughout the country.

Alvin W. Hall, for 15 years the director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, will be honored tomorrow night at a testimonial banquet given by the National Federation of Federal Employees at the Mayflower Hotel.

Luther W. Steward, N. F. F. E. president, will serve as toastmaster. Members of Congress, Federal executives and several hundred union members will attend.

Va. Council Asks Ban on Prison Fees

3 More Jail Farms,
Constable Office
Abolition Also Urged
In Report to Price

Richmond, Va., Dec. 14 (AP).—A comprehensive report on Virginia's penal system, recommending the abolition of the fee system as a means of compensating sheriffs and city sergeants, has been submitted to Gov. Price by the Virginia Legislative Advisory Council.

The council also recommended: Creation of a division of corrections within the department of welfare;

A State probation and parole system;

Abolition of the office of constable.

Substitution of a straight salary instead of the fee system for sheriffs and city sergeants was recommended, with two-thirds of the salary to be paid by the State and one-third by the localities.

A board of corrections, composed of five persons appointed by the Governor, would head the division of corrections suggested by the General Assembly would be required, and the board members would receive no salary, but would be paid traveling expenses and $1 per day for each day worked. They would select their own administrative officer.

The report showed that from 1918 through 1938 the State's jail commitments increased from 21,631 to 86,522 a year; penitentiary commitments from 452 to 1,942, and criminal costs paid by the State from $387,597 to $1,209,845.

"While the extremely high commitment rate to Virginia jails and the enormous criminal expenses are caused by many factors, it cannot be gainsaid that the fee system, offering as it does an opportunity for numerous abuses, has played its part in the State's unfortunate record in this respect," the council reported.

With reference to the office of constable, the report said that "there is nothing the constable does that cannot as well be done by the sheriff and his deputies, except perhaps to act in the place of a coroner... but the court may take care of this contingency by appointing an extra coroner... there is no good reason now to continue the office of constable."

History of Mammals Extended Another Million Years or Two

Smithsonian Paleontologist Finds Remains
Of Small Warm-Blooded Animal of Paleocene
Era in Crazy Mountains of Utah

The already formidable history of warm-blooded animals on earth has been extended another couple of million years, the Smithsonian Institution announced yesterday, with discovery in central Utah of fossil remains of animals no larger than today's rabbit.

This discovery was made by Dr. C. Lewis Gazin, Smithsonian paleontologist, and consists of scattered teeth and bones of creatures which flourished some 60,000,000 years ago. The bones and teeth were dug from a bed of rock 165 feet below the last stratum showing any evidence of animal existence in the Crazy Mountains.

"It is a page torn out of that obscure chapter in earth's history known to geologists as the Paleocene era," said the Smithsonian paleontologist. "The period which directly preceded the Eocene era, when the ancestors of most mammals, singing birds and flowering plants now extant made their appearance."

The Paleocene era, it seems, was sandwiched between the Cretaceous era of the great reptiles and that which saw the beginning of things as they are now. In only a few parts of the earth are Paleocene remains, five of them in North America.

Dr. Gazin discovered the small mammal remains in a search for remains of the "Dragon fauna," forms hitherto unknown and arbitrarily named. After grubbing through 165 feet of barren rock, he came unexpectedly upon the Paleocene fossils.

"The actual bones and teeth themselves," the Smithsonian explained, "are very similar to those of the Dragon fauna, although an expert senses that they are slightly more primitive. Evolution moved slowly in those days."

"A million years—approximately the span of existence of man on earth—made very little change. Some forms, however, are more abundant in the lower than the upper strata, indicating that they had reached their heyday before the Dragon era."

At both levels investigated by Dr. Gazin indications were found of flesh-eating animals and small creatures resembling, in some respects, the hoofed animals of today.

The trustees will preview the exhibits today in the institution's administration building, Sixteenth and P streets northwest. Visiting hours for the public are 7:30 to 10:30 p. m. tomorrow and on Sunday and Monday, from 2 to 5 p. m. and 7:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Three of the exhibits, "The Earth's Magnetism," "Leukemia in Mice," and "Combustion of Carbohydrates by Man," were prepared in cooperation with the Museum of Science and Industry of New York.

"Cosmic Rays" was installed with the aid of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia.

Six public lectures are scheduled for Ellhu Root Hall, administration building. At 8:30 p. m. tomorrow, T. H. Johnson will speak on cosmic rays. How volcanoes have influenced history in Central America will be described at 8:30 p. m. Sunday by A. V. Kidder. This lecture will be followed by one by L. H. Adams on "Volcanoes and the Central America as Outdoor Laboratories for Earth Sciences."

The two talks Sunday night, the first beginning at 8 o'clock, will be by A. H. Joy, on motions and dimensions of the stellar system, and E. C. MacDowell, whose subject is "Leukemia in Mice."

Playwrights' Company Shifts Into High Gear

New Plays Planned, With 'Madam' for Coast;
Bill Robinson Clinches Right to Crown;
News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

By Nelson B. Bell

DEFINITE DECISION seems now to have been reached by the Playwrights' Co. as to the final disposition of the late Sidney Howard's last comedy, "Madam, Will You Walk?" seen recently at the National Theater, with George M. Cohan in the stellar role.

The play was being pointed for its Broadway opening when Mr. Cohan withdrew from the cast at end of the Washington engagement and precipitated much scurrying about on the part of the producers in an effort to find some suitable artist to assume the role of Dr. Brightlee, against the reopening of the piece in New York on Christmas night. This plan now has been completely abandoned.

Instead of reopening the postponed play in the East, the Playwrights' Co. now has decided to favor the West Coast by presenting it there on or about June 1, with Sir Cedric Hardwicke in the Cohan role. Peggy Conklin, Sara Allgood and Arthur Kennedy will again be seen in the parts in which they appeared locally. This arrangement was prompted by Sir Cedric's inability to complete film commitments at the RKO-Radio studio before the June date.

This, however, is not the only enterprise in which the Producers' Co. is actively engaged. Of the oncoming new productions under the Playwrights' aegis, Elmer Rice's "Two On An Island" will be first. This play was being pointed for its Broadway opening when Mr. Cohan withdrew from the cast at end of the Washington engagement and precipitated much scurrying about on the part of the producers in an effort to find some suitable artist to assume the role of Dr. Brightlee, against the reopening of the piece in New York on Christmas night. This plan now has been completely abandoned.

Second of the new productions will be a play by Robert E. Sherwood, author of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" and his first since that monumental work. The title and contents of the new Sherwood opus, at the moment, are a closely guarded secret. If all proceeds as planned, this offering will reach Broadway in February with a notable cast.

A recent note from Mr. Sherwood prompts me to wonder if Washington will catch the first glimpse of his latest play. That note, in part, had this to say: "My feelings about Washington are stronger than ever. It's the best place on earth in which to form judgment on a new play. As soon as I get around to writing another myself you'll (as usual) be the first to see it."

Now, Mr. Plöhn, if you can just see it that there's an open date at your National opera house . . .

And you might as well know now as any time that such success has greeted the road tours of Katharine Cornell in S. N. Behrman's "No Time for Comedy" and Raymond Massey in Mr. Sherwood's Pulitzer Prize winner, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," that both tours have been extended a number of weeks past their original closing dates. In the meantime, Paul Muni in Maxwell Anderson's "Key Largo" is settling down for a prosperous run at the Ethel Barrymore Theater in New York. Now in its third week, "Key Largo" will gross more than its second big stanza, which, in turn, was only slightly off from the banner opening week which, incidentally, surpassed the same firm's opening weeks of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." The Playwrights seem to be doing off right for themselves as producers.

I don't recall ever having heard anyone suggest that Bill Robinson is not the greatest tap dancer in the world, but if anyone ever did, unlike Bill he wouldn't have a leg to stand on.

Since the opening night of the "Hot Mikado," at the National, this column has caught the Robinson second act—the only one in which he appears—at every performance except the Wednesday matinee with a constantly growing appreciation of this fabulous fellow's supreme artistry. Tap dancing may not generally be looked upon as an art, but that is what it is in Bill Robinson's case. With the effortless ease of a gentle breeze, Bill executes his double and triple-times so expertly that they seem simplicity itself. No acrobatics, no thrashing about, no leaping and bounding—merely the perfection of rhythm produced by miraculous coordination and a sense of timing that not only is metronomic but could be used to set a stop-watch.

The most amazing feature of it all is, though, that Bill never does the same routine twice. None of his performances I have witnessed has been anything like any of the others. The "best show of the week," so far, was Wednesday night—a surprising thing for matinee day. The whole company seemed to be on its toes, but no one quite so much as Bill. He danced

Yield to Lure Of Footlights

The lure of the boards—and an audience—is really getting to Hollywood these days. Screen players are leaving in droves for New York stage appearances.

Mary Martin, who makes her screen bow in "The Great Victor Herbert," left for Gotham by air the day she finished the picture. The singing star goes into "Hold Your Hats," which had been in rehearsal three weeks by the time she arrived.

Comedienne Marie Wilson already is on Broadway and has been accounted a big hit. Judith Barrett, Paramount starlet, is trying to get permission from the studio to accept an offer from Wallace Ford to do a role in "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?"

Edward Everett Horton has been on tour in "Springtime for Henry." Lionel Stander, who played recently in the screen version of "What a Life," is scheduled to take a bow in "Saturday Night."

Brian Donlevy hopes to escape from screen villain roles long enough to do a revival of "Front Page," and Louis Campbell, who just finished "Emergency Squad," has renounced Hollywood to do "Purple Splendor" in New York. Helen Twelvetrees is already appearing in "You Can't Take It With You."

John Barrymore's daughter, Diana, is appearing in a road company production of "Outward Bound."

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Dec. 13. Zoila Conan, Director William Wellman's secretary, comes up with the best idea of the week. "In most every industry," says she, "employes arrange for experts to impart knowledge to younger, less experienced associates. So, advertising clubs, automotive cliques all enlist their best-known names to lecture for their associates from time to time."

And like Zoila, think Hollywood ought to take the hint. To quote her again: "A man may come fresh from the writing staff of the world's greatest newspapers to this industry—or a very successful author—and yet he cannot master screenplay-writing without preparation!" So several studios might pool funds and give courses in story structure, script writing and the other tricks of the trade—revealed by those who mastered them. Not long ago Miss Conan went to hear Sheridan (G. W. T. W.) Gibney analyze one of his scripts. He was interrupted with questions and made such a hit with the professional writers and story editors who attended that he came back for three more lectures. We may be a proud group here, but when oodles of world-known names and faces drink in information like this, it proves we're not too proud to learn—and we ought to establish a permanent institution of learning right here and now . . . What say, producers?

HOPPER

May Robson, just in from a two week trip to New York, phoned to say that Kay Kyser had given her a wonderful cocktail party at the Waldorf—and when she went to see the play, "Life With Father" at the old Empire Theater—all she could think of were the ghosts of her own life backstage. She kept thinking "in the dressing room—two steps down—was where I put a wart on my lip and then embellished it with hairs for 'Liberty Hall' and all during the play when my back was to the audience, Henry Miller kept trying to blow the hairs off my face."

Hollywood's flying Santa Claus is Wally Berry. Soon as "Arouse and Beware" on the seventeenth he flies to Chicago, picks up his new airplane, does his shopping there, makes a test flight to New Orleans, and zooms back to Hollywood to spend Christmas with Carol Ann and the new baby! And maybe with Mae Murray, who's being very coy about their rumored romance.

On Sunday night, when George M. Cohan will come to town to see himself in the Catholic University Harlequin's "Yankee Doodle Boy," based on his own career, he will be accompanied by photographers from Life to make pictures of the gala event. The local drama desks have been graciously invited to sit in and spoil them! Lovers of Cohan songs will discover a million of them, more or less, in "Yankee Doodle Boy," dating as far back as "I Guess I'll Have to Telegraph My Baby," the first one this department remembers, "way back there in those 'Gay Nineties.'" The action of the piece begins with George Cohan's first visit back stage in a trunk tray in 1878, the year of his birth.

Voice-From-Back-of-the-Hall Note
How did he look from the gallery, Bell—or didn't you have your specs with you?

Screwball Marie Wilson sat next to Paul Whiteman at his birthday celebration in New York, and when Paul got up to go back to conduct another snappy number, Marie spoke right up and asked: "Whose band is playing for us tonight?" . . . Richard Whorf, who plays the delightful dyspnoeiac in the Lunt-Fontanne production of "Taming of the Shrew" in Hollywood, for several months this summer—testing for "Hunchback of Notre Dame." And, of all things, the reason he didn't get the part was: they couldn't make him ugly enough. Well, he was no beauty as Christopher Sly . . . But, say, can he act? He wows 'em!

Lionel Barrymore has just been handed a present from his physicians, that they can positively cure his arthritis, and in two months you'll probably see your favorite film doctor sans crutches and wheelchair. We hope so, anyway . . . Lew Foster, who wrote the original of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," has received about ten national awards for his script. And no one has pointed out flaws in its technical information. No—Foster has never even been to Washington, D. C. . . . Priscilla Lane will inaugurate a swap shop so that anybody on the Warner lot getting Christmas presents that they don't like can swap them for presents they do. Incidentally, Priscilla has installed a rifle range in her back yard, preparing for a rainy day, no doubt.

These Drinks Provide Warmth and Holiday Cheer

Spice Cups Win Week's Contest

Recipes Offered
For Eggnog
Wassail Bowl,
Georgian Punch

By The Post Food Editor.

CHRISTMAS holidays and all the attendant festivities might be expressed aptly with three of Santa Claus' spritely reindeer—Dash, Dancer and Prancer. And some topnotch recipes for holiday cheer to offer the guests may be found in the winning recipes of this week's Post contest.

Spice of Life

Mrs. Harold E. Morehouse, Jr., 2428 Fourteenth street northwest, suggests a Christmas drink which she says is delightful to serve on a chilly holiday night. The following is her recipe, for which she wins the first $3.

Spice Cups

Combine 2½ cups orange juice, 1 cup pineapple juice, ½ cup sugar and 2 cups water. Add rind of 1 lemon (grated), 1 tablespoon strained honey, 6 whole cloves, ½ teaspoon each of cinnamon and grated nutmeg, and ¼ teaspoon allspice. Mix, and let stand for three hours. Strain, and add 3 pints gingerale. Stir briskly and serve in glasses containing ice. Makes about 3 quarts.

Hot Version

An easy and refreshing drink to make for a cold blustery day is hot pineapple eggnog as made by Helen Richter, 24 Rhode Island

Hot Pineapple Eggnog

Separate the yolks and whites of 2 eggs. Add 1 tablespoon sugar to egg yolks and beat thoroughly. Bring 1 cup unsweetened pineapple juice to boil and add ½ cup cream and reheat. Pour the hot pineapple juice and cream on egg yolks and the sugar and heat, stirring constantly. Add 1 tablespoon sugar to the 2 beaten egg whites and fold into the hot mixture. If desired, serve sprinkled with grated orange peel. Serves 4 to 6.

Greek Delight

A rich and extravagant version of the eggnog is the one made by the recipe of Lucille Lawlor, 1627 Thirty-fifth street northwest. Mark Twain said, "Too much of anything is bad, but too much whisky is just enough," and such is the way with Mrs. Lawlor's winning recipe for which she receives a $1 award.

Eggnog Epicurean
Beat 8 egg yolks and whites separately. Add 4 tablespoons powdered sugar to the beaten yolks. Add to 1 quart milk and 1 quart cream. Add 2 tablespoons powdered sugar to the beaten whites. Measure 2 ounces sherry, 2-3 pint brandy and 1-3 pint rum

How to Protect Linoleum Floors

Linoleum floors. If you wish to keep your linoleum appearing well and prevent its wearing out, you must care for it properly. Here again, save the surface by protecting it. A nonrubbing wax is excellent and easy to apply. Put the wax on when the floor is clean and dry, and it will prevent dirt and grit from grinding down into the linoleum. The soil will remain on the surface and be wiped up with the wax when the floor is cleaned. Then apply a new coat.

Don't use too much soap and water when cleaning linoleum. Muddy and dingy spots on any floor are usually best removed with a cloth wrung tightly out of light suds. Never wash a floor with a streaming mop.

BURNETT'S PURE VANILLA

FAMOUS FOR QUALITY SINCE 1847

Many and diverse are the cups whose fragrance greets holiday guests. Eggnogs and possets, fruit mulls and toddies, swigs and punches, are all among the drinks The Post recipe contestants have suggested with which to say "good health" during the Christmas season. The appealing nog shown in the cups in the picture above is a tangy, zestful Pineapple Eggnog, sprinkled with nutmeg into the punch bowl slowly. Add the yolks and cream to the liquors. Add whites last. This eggnog may be made the day before time for serving so that it may "age" but it is delicious made just before serving.

The Artist's Way

A Christmas drink as attractive as it is delicious is the one made by Mrs. Henry Lehne, 1916 Emerson avenue, Dayton, Ohio, for which she wins a $1 award. The directions for making her drink—Georgian punch—follows. This recipe is one that you will want in your file to make at other times than Christmas.

Georgian Punch

Mix 1 can grated or crushed pineapple, ½ cup sugar, 1½ quarts water, 2 cups white grape juice and juice of 6 lemons and juice of 6 oranges. Add 1 int sherry and place in refrigerator. Mix the juice of 6 lemons and 6 oranges and put in ice cube tray. Place a maraschino cherry in each cube and freeze. To serve, fill cups half full of punch and place an orange-lemon cherry cube in each cup.

Ancient but Good

The Wassail bowl is the way Mrs. W. A. Wildhack, 405 Piedmont street, Arlington, Va., believes in expressing her good

Mrs. Wildhack

Wassail Bowl

To 1 quart of cider add the juice and pulp of 2 oranges and 1 lemon. Add 1 cup sugar, a pinch of nutmeg and cloves and a spice, 2 sticks cinnamon (5 inches long). Heat, allow to come to a boil. Strain, serve hot. Cut up raw apples and add them just before serving. The drink should be made the day before it is to be served. Coffee cake or German cookies are good accompaniments.

In Oriental Manner

A salt without salt is the new seasoning, Chinese style, made entirely from soybeans, free from coloring and preservatives. It has the identical taste of fried onions ground. You will like it if you like the lusty onion bulb. To add an Oriental touch to sherbet, add some chopped candied ginger to fruit sherbet.

Incidental notes for the holiday festivities are noted in new forms in the shops this year. Red, white and green grow the cocktail onions. Olives come cut into rings ready for garnishing and, what's more, packed into a spiced sauce with a garlic perfume. There is a cheese snack with a smack, a mixture of nine sharp cheese blended as one.

Ready-Made Custard Offered To Washington

A colored cook in a family of children always urged the children to eat sparingly of the meat course so as to leave a little room for the "hereafter." A new food has been developed by a local dairy that is in the "hereafter" class. It is a delicious fluid custard. This new food will be just the thing if there is a hungry youngster in the family. When it is time to re-fuel sonny boy or sister this nutritious custard will be just the thing, for it is as appealing as it is nutritious.

Custards acquired a celestial association thanks to the incomparable Green Pastures production that was such a favorite for a number of years. This new variation will no doubt increase its popularity. The custard in fluid form, is excellent for the sick or convalescent, and since it can be used in a number of ways—a drink as a custard dessert, in combination with fruit, as an ingredient in bread and like puddings—there is no danger of tiring of the product.

The custard drink made of strictly fresh eggs—not less than two in each quart—sugar, vanilla and whole milk will keep as well as milk and in the same way. No shaking is necessary for it stays smooth and full-flavored until the last drop. This product is sold at a moderate price.

Its introduction comes just at the season when it will be a welcome and easy way to make an eggnog, by the addition of a few more ingredients. A rich and interesting dessert may be developed from it by the addition of whipped cream and nuts and cherries if desired, then placed in the refrigerator tray to freeze.

An ingenious cook will be sure to develop many interesting dishes from this new bottled creation, for its blandness will make it adaptable for additional foods. Since it is a ready-to-serve product, and easily handled, it will be sure to prove a general favorite and a "friend" to the Washington public.

Cherry Pudding Sauce

Add 1 cup sugar to ¼ cup butter and blend well. Add 1 cup cherry juice. Cook, stirring constantly, to boiling point, then boil, without stirring, for 15 minutes. One cup well-drained cherries may be added after removing from the fire. Serve hot or cold. Serves 6.

Natural Dessert For Christmas Is a Pudding

Bakers Offer
Holiday Cake
For Hostesses

A CHRISTMAS cake or pudding carried to the table all aflame with burning brandy, is the natural follow-up for the royal bird and its trimmings for Christmas. Most of us mean to—but never really do—leave room for the pudding. Perhaps if everyone took a preview of the delicious fruit cakes and puddings they would exercise will power and leave space for such desserts.

Many cooks think that baking Christmas cakes and puddings is a necessary ritual of the holiday season. Others think that it takes too much "doing" to chop the fruit and other goodies, and are glad to know that the bakeries turn out excellent products which can be served at home or given as Christmas gifts.

Many Kinds of Cake

There are almost as many kinds of fruit cakes as there are ingredients to go into them. One of the finest fruit cakes made especially for popular hostesses is the Holiday Cake. This is packed in a decorated, covered tin box. The medallion on the cover is copied from one in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. When the cover is removed, there is this lovely ring of fruitcake, wrapped in cellophane and tied with a lovely red-satin ribbon. It is no stinging ribbon, for it is about 1½ inches wide. This is a light fruit cake, full of fruits and nuts. This retail for a popular price and is obtainable in two, three and five-pound tins. The two-pound cake is in an oblong tin, the five and three-pound ones are made in the shape of a ring. Two of the five-pound sizes would be alluring on either end of a Christmas Eve or New Year's buffet table, with a large candle in the center of each and the whole cake surrounded with holly.

If a cake of the dark variety is desired, there is one called Orchard Fruit Cake. This comes in all sizes and weights, and may be had ring-shaped, solid, round or oblong. This is wrapped in cellophane and is obtainable at a lower price than light fruit cake.

Novelty in Fruit Cake

Made from a treasured old Southern recipe, one of the most popular cakes, weighing approximately 3½ pounds, is a dark cake filled with fruits and nuts and topped with cherries, pineapple and pecans. This variety comes only in the ring mold shape, is wrapped in cellophane and packed in a red holiday gift box.

If one is looking for a novelty in a fruit cake, there is a dark fruit cake type, weighing 2½ pounds, which comes wrapped in cellophane and tied with a beautiful red satin ribbon. The container is an attractive chrome box, called a floral centerpiece, that may be used, after the cake is eaten, for either flowers or fruit. The cover is perforated in an attractive design and in using these perforations it acts as a holder for the flowers.

The ring mold cakes can be steamed and used for a pudding dessert. The center may be filled with a hard sauce, and with little effort one has both a delicious and effective dessert. The following is a recipe for pineapple hard sauce:

Pineapple Hard Sauce

Cream well 1-3 cup softened butter, adding 1 cup powdered sugar and 1 unbeaten egg white. Beat until light. Carefully fold in 2-3 cup drained crushed pineapple. Serve cold.

Plum puddings are also a great favorite for holiday dinners. A sauce should always complement the pudding. With pudding sauce, "the object is sublime, to let the punishment fit the crime." Rum, sherry, arac or table wine all do very well as does an occasional dash of brandy in making a hard sauce.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl of Little Education Marries College Graduate; She Asks How to Acquire Academic Polish

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: What can a girl of 24 do, who has no education and who is thrown with well-informed and well-educated people every day? That is my situation. I find myself in many embarrassing experiences. A misfortune occurred which prevented me from finishing high school. To be exact, I had only six months' high schooling. And now I am married to a college graduate and find it very difficult to keep up with him.

I read all the new books, both fiction and nonfiction. But when it comes to spelling and mathematics, I am at a loss. Please tell me how I can do some studying; or some place or way to improve my education quietly. Sincerely, ANXIOUS.

DEAR ANXIOUS: Proficiency at spelling and mathematics are knacks more inborn than acquired. Many elaborately educated persons are brazenly inaccurate at spelling and "figuring." So you have no special cause for shame if your additions and subtractions don't come out correctly, or if you spell phonetically rather than after the fashion of Webster.

However, if you would become better grounded in reading, writing, arithmetic, and kindred subjects, I suggest that you either study with a private tutor, or enroll in night school for a regulation high school course. By telephoning Mr. E. J. Lockwood, director of night schools, National 6800, you can get information on night classes of study. The second semester opens in February, 1940.

Dr. Chester Holmes, assistant superintendent of senior high schools, telephone National 6000, can put you in touch with tutors. Or you can contact a similar service by calling Mrs. Vinnie Barrows, at George Washington University, telephone National 5200. Mrs. Barrows is in charge of women's personnel guidance at the university, and also directs the school's employment bureau, through which students of both sexes market their tutoring abilities. M. H.

Does Polite Man Hold

Girl's Hand at Movies?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you consider it proper and polite for a young college man to take hold of a not-well-known girl's arm while walking on the street, or in other circumstances? Is this considered a familiar gesture? Also I would like to have your opinion on "holding hands" in a movie. Any advice on the above matters will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely, JOHNNIE.

Margaret Fishback

Takes Liberal View

DEAR JOHNNIE: Emily Post considers it very bad manners indeed for a young man to "take hold of a girl's arm while walking on the street." In a chapter headed, "On the Street and in Public," Mrs. Post says in the 1935 edition of Etiquette: "Under no circumstances should (a man) take (a girl's) arm, or grasp her by or above the elbow, and shove her here and there—unless, of course, to save her from being run over." Steering a girl by her arm is not so much a "familiar" gesture as it is a yokel's mannerism.

If the situation is such that the lady appears to need the gentleman's support, the approved procedure appears to be that of "offering his arm," as the quaint old phrase goes. Mrs. Post informs us that, "in accompanying a lady anywhere at night, whether down the steps of a house, or from one building to another, or when walking a distance, a gentleman always offers his arm." However, when "assisting her to get into a motor or taxi or street car," it is correct for him to put his hand under her elbow. In helping her out, he alights first and offers his hand.

Now, as for holding hands in a movie, that—in my opinion—is a strictly personal matter; quite as personal as deciding whether to kiss your girl "hello" or "goodbye." I'm sure I don't know what Mrs. Post would say about it, but I have observed that it is being done, and by very nice people, too.

I wish you could get hold of a copy of Margaret Fishback's "Safe Conduct," a brilliantly witty and common sense discourse on good manners for moderns. She goes into the matter of hand holding; observes that some of the more dignified authorities frown upon it, and ventures to twit them on their stuffiness. She reports gleefully that with her own eyes she has seen perfectly charming couples holding hands in the streets of New York, and the implication is that it's okay by her. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Bridal Outfit For Winter

Going to be married this winter? Then you'll be interested in the wedding gown and veil designed for Linda Hayes to wear in "Mexican Spitfire." Dress is chalk white crepe, very heavy, the slim skirt falling in rich folds from the high, up-curved waistline. Bodice front is gathered along shoulder seams and edge of high band collar, and at high waistline. Tulle veil, the long, sweeping veil every girl dreams of, is gathered to a fitted Juliet cap studded with brilliants. Matching brilliants are caught casually in the veil. Linda's bouquet is gardenia and lilacs of the valley with green maidenhair fern.

Bound for Nassau In New Resort Togs

If you're one of the lucky migrants who has Florida, or the West Indies on your itinerary soon, the costumes pictured here may help solve wardrobe quandaries. The three-piece suit at left will be the nucleus of your shipboard clothes, since the skirt is of gray flannel, the jacket and topcoat of cross-barred gray flannel, good backgrounds for many changes of blouses, sweaters and accessories. Also in neutral key is the slacks suit at right in natural English linen-flax, worn here with its own snowy jersey blouse. Margaret Myers, who modeled these ensembles from a local shop at a recent Shoreham Hotel fashion show, has just returned from Nassau where she reports slacks are wardrobe "musts"

Your Figure, Madame!

Neglect Exercise, Overeat and You Will Put Weight On

By Ida Jean Kain

MANY WOMEN go on reducing diets. Probably 75 per cent of all women diet at one time or another. Of that number, about 30 per cent regain all their overweight by overeating, and the other 25 per cent neglect their exercise and lose their figures anyway. Figures prove that only a small percentage live happily ever after!

As soon as you are nice and slim you find that you can eat about as you please without gaining any weight. "This is wonderful," you think. "It's too good to be true!" It is—and it doesn't last!

Just go back to your old, comfortable habit of overeating at bridge luncheons, afternoon teas and de luxe dinners and your slimming will be about as permanent as a bath. You have only to give yourself time and you will regain every single pound that you fought and dieted off.

Keep Sensible Habits

Your chance of staying slim depends on retaining some of the dietary and exercise habits that slimmed you down. All that takes is sensible eating, coupled with a certain amount of regular exercise. But disregard those two slimming measures and you will be shocked at the speed with which the scales can climb back to their former high level.

Keep right on with the balanced menus. They contain the protective foods you need and you could never gain weight on a diet built around the protective foods, plus a few extras to meet your energy requirements. The extras will allow you to pick and choose among the foods you particularly like. But be careful! Watch your calorie chart to see that you do not go beyond your calorie needs.

A few of your reducing rules will make it very much easier for you to keep slim. You should never go back to eating the fat part of meat—you can have twice as much lean meat for the same number of calories!

You can have one or even two slices of bread per meal, but no more. And don't forget that whole wheat bread is the kind you really need.

Butter Contains Calories

It's awfully easy to slip back into the habit of two or three pats of butter with each meal. That's no way to keep slim! Now that you are not counting calories too closely you are apt to overlook the butter used in cooking. No matter how you take it, one small pat, one-fourth inch thick, contains 50 calories, and you are not likely to shave the butter that closely.

As long as you stay slim, you will have to guard against the pastries and desserts that were almost deleted entirely from your reducing menus. Those two items did not help you to get slim and they won't help you to stay that way.

Cruise Clothes Go American, Are Simple and Comfortable

Frills and Gee-Gaws Disappear; Sheer Flannels Popular; White Dresses, Tailored Slacks Predominate

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor

WHEN you cruise South this month or next, you're likely to turn into a mystery lady wearing tropical cool Siam cloth or be swathed in turban and frock of silken Hindu print. Or—you may stride forth on deck in linen slacks straight from the British Isles.

You're more likely, however, to appear clean, scrubbed and wholesome in domestic piques and sharkskins direct from 100 per cent native mills. This winter there seems to be a fervor to promote resort clothes in the all-American tradition. The reasons are twofold—first, because its becoming difficult to import textiles; second, because most Americans get tired of wearing Victorian or Edwardian "plush" when they relax in the sun, preferring adaptable cruise wardrobes based on the American plan of comfort.

Texture of Things To Come

Having just seen the collection of crisp young resort things at a local shop, we discovered the finds of the advance season to be—

SHEER FLANNELS AND ALPACAS. These are made into sportswear and dressy afternoon frocks. Some are classically simple in one-piece shirtwaist editions. Others are three-piece costumes, say a white flannel dress with a tri-color insignia on the bodice, worn under a flag-blue jersey jacket. Really high style is a cream wool jersey sports dress accented with pigskin buttons and belt. The "covered-up look" crops up for resort wear via long-sleeved, tissue woolen sports dresses with saucy young hoods attached.

BRILLIANTLY WHITE DRESSES. These are important for Southern wear. Chemists claim that the whitest white under the sun is snow, but the snowman has a rival in sharkskin and pique. Waffle pique is important, especially in gay round-the-clock frocks with flaring umbrella skirts and neatly buttoned pockets. Sharkskin looks exciting this year when made into bolero suits with bright flashes of color in blouse and turban. Mottled gray sharkskin looks inviting when used for slacks and shorts and punctuated with plaid gingham shirts.

Slacks Are Trim

Slacks. Those of meticulous cut are already reported going "big guns" in Miami, where, incidentally all those frustrated European cruise escapists have had to take refuge this winter—so that the Florida "season" is already flourishing. Flax-linen slacks suits, by Craig, of England, are being worn by more than one of these escapists and a Washington shop has cornered a number of the flawlessly tailored English-cut trouser and jacket ensembles. Also out of the British Isles come Craig's cool, sheer chambra in those gentle pastel pinks and blues for golf, tennis, bicycling or spectator sports under a Trinidad or Palm Beach sun.

As for the most essential part of every cruise wardrobe, the basic travel suit, seldom have the tweeds and pastel woolens looked more vivacious to our rain-soaked eyes. There are many varieties of woolen—some warm enough for immediate wear as a pick-me-up for holiday gad-abouting. There are some fine English tweeds, bought when England was conscious of tweeds rather than air raid warnings. They are drenched with rose, citron, sky blue and lemon tones against backgrounds of string, gray and beige.

Glass Gadgets For Movie Stars

Latest report from Hollywood indicate that a number of the stars are living in glass houses, full of glass gadgets.

Ginger Rogers' dressing room is paneled in mirror glass (very convenient for that last moment once over), the panels sliding back to reveal cupboards and shelves for frocks, lingerie, hats and other accessories. Venetian blinds at the windows are also glass.

Maureen O'Hara has had panels of mirror glass made to fit her luncheon table. Panels, used instead of cloth, reflect her crystal centerpiece filled with flowers, the glass luncheon service, lighted candles. Napkins are the only linen used.

Anne Shirley stores away all her blankets, sheets, linens in transparent utility boxes of assorted sizes. Contents of boxes can be seen without opening them, saving much useless rummaging.

By Malvina Lindsay,

Walking the Tight Rope

Well, what do you think of this one?

"Oh—why, I think it's a wonderful likeness!"

"Do you mean to say THAT picture looks like me?"

"Well, yes, that is a little—" "I think it's perfectly terrible! It makes me look so blah and so fat. I know my neck's not that thick."

"Oh, well, of course it doesn't flatter you any—no, what I mean is it really doesn't do you justice. It was only that I thought—well, your hair's nice in it... and then the detail in the dress shows up nicely."

"It makes me sick to look at it... Now how do you like this pose?"

"Oh, I don't like that at all."

"You don't? Why everybody says it's the perfect image of me!"

"Oh, well, wait a minute! I didn't have it in the right light. Oh, yes, I've seen you look like that—no, what I mean is you look that way a lot."

"I think it's a very good picture myself. Now here's still another pose."

"Oh—that's lovely!"

"You think so! Look at the sickening grin! Now I know that picture makes me look a lot sillier than I am."

"Oh, no, it doesn't! No, no, that isn't what I mean! What I mean is it doesn't really look silly—no, I mean you really don't look silly."

"Well, I know I don't look like that!"

"Oh, no, certainly not. When I said it was lovely I just meant it was a lovely—well, a lovely finish. But, of course, it's not YOU!"

"I hope not. Well, here's another pose."

"Well, that's a very beautiful picture."

"But it doesn't look like me?"

"Oh, yes, yes. It looks a lot like you. It's really a picture of your better self—no, no, what I mean is it's really you at your best—no, what I'm trying to say is it's really YOU."

"You don't think it flatters me?"

"Oh, no, no! Anybody would know it was you—no, what I mean is nobody would fail to know it was you—oh, that isn't what I meant, either."

"I see. Well, now here's another proof."

"Well, that's a very er-er interesting picture."

"Does it look like me?"

"Well, yes—in some ways."

"I don't like it. I know I'm not that hump-shouldered. And my hair looks as if it was a wig."

"No, I see now it isn't as good as I thought. What I meant was that it was an er—an unusual study."

"Well, I don't—er—know just what to say."

"You think it's a nice picture?"

"Well, yes—and no."

"You think it looks like me?"

"Well, it does and it doesn't."

"What do you mean, it doesn't?"

"Well—of course, it could look a lot more like you."

"You mean it's a good-looking picture because it doesn't look like me?"

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Mrs. Dewey, Wife of Candidate, Dodges Politics in First Mass Interview

New York, Dec. 14.
THE MINUTE a Presidential candidate pops up, all smiles for the cameramen, somewhere in the back ground lurks his ever-helpful wife. As soon as he is officially launched, like a new cruiser, the helpmate is pulled into the foreground to display a vessel to the populace. So it has been with Mrs. Thomas E. Dewey, pretty wife of our rootin' lootin' District Attorney, now the fair-haired boy of the Empire State's Republicans.

Mr. Dewey is a very young fellow to stand for the Nation's highest office, not being far past the Constitutional minimum of 35. He and his misus became involved in their romance while both were studying their sharps and flats with a view to singing careers. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Dewey decided to devote his career to chasing malefactors up alleys and into stirs, while Mrs. Dewey retired into matrimony and the raising of two young sons.

Cochairman of the Dewey campaign committee is that redoubtable lady politico, Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms, daughter of the late Mark Hanna, who put McKinley into the Presidency, and herself a former member of Congress. She it was who tossed the tea-party which introduced the D. A.'s spouse to us ladies of the press. Mrs. Dewey was a bit shy at first, since she merely expected a tea-fight and not a mass interview. But she rallied, and gave the affair the old Dewey try.

"Political questions are off the record," announced Madame Simms, so we were pretty well limited to the fact that one of the Dewey children has been battling the croup. She also remarked briefly on her career as a contralto singer, and the tea went round and the sound with Mrs. Simms riding hard on the press. Mrs. Dewey impressed us as a very attractive and alert woman, and probably a good campaigner in embryo. Beyond that, we do not know. "No politics," said Madame Simms, so the candidate's wife might as well have been head of the Ladies' Aid.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Now that transatlantic shipping is in a parlous, or practically non-existent state, owing to troubles overseas, people hop on and off these clipper planes as nonchalantly as the commuter grabs the 531 for Scarsdale. Three fine fashion girls winged in on one flight the other day—Jacqueline Vellerville, a Paris commissionaire who is full of that town's style recovery among the sandbags; Helene Lyons, who is to design a collection for Hattie Carnegie, and Dora Miller, who represents our lace firms in Europe, and is a regular air commuter. Must be fun to just come and go like that...

ing through the divorce mill with Jackie Coogan, is reported to be fed up with her trial job in the new Cole Porter musical show, "DuBarry Was a Lady," which costars Ethel Merman and Bert Lahr, and the chatterbox say she may hand in her papers and go elsewhere.

NOT LONG AGO I mentioned that Russell Markert had sent out a call for replacements for the Music Hall Rockettes, the West Point cadets of show business. Russell now says that 300 pretty dancers turned up—and that not one passed the strict exam.

One of the most remarkable women I know is Beatrice Auerbach, of Hartford, Conn. Not only is she the active head of one of the best and most profitable department stores in those parts, but also runs a large and scientifically handled farm on the outskirts. She is also mistress of a large home in town, and watches the affairs of two grown daughters, one just out of school, the other at Bryn Mawr. Bea's secret is absolute concentration on the job of the moment. Thus everything clicks...

Mary Winslow Reviews Havana Labor Parley

Necessity of Social Justice as Basis for International Solidarity in Cause of Peace Aim of Sessions, Trade Union League Told

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Staff Editor.

Recognition of common problems and of the necessity for social justice as a basis for international solidarity in the cause of peace dominated the Havana conference of the International Labor Organization, in the opinion of Miss Mary E. Winslow, United States Government delegate.

Miss Winslow reviewed resolutions and recommendations of the conference yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the District Branch of the National Women's Trade Union League at the Raleigh Hotel. Miss Rose Schneiderman, president of the national organization, who was a workers' adviser and vice chairman of the committee on social insurance for the conference, was here from New York to preside. Others who participated in the Havana sessions and were also present yesterday included Dorothy Belanca, of New York, vice president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who was a workers' adviser; Kathryn Lewis, daughter of John L. Lewis, a workers' adviser; Beatrice McConnell, of the Children's Bureau, and Mary Robinson, of the Women's Bureau, Government advisers.

Representatives of many of the leading women's organizations in the city were among the 90 who attended the luncheon. The resolutions of the conference were on the broad basis of essential labor standards, said Miss Winslow. Several dealt with the need for guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining, protection of civil liberties and establishment of labor standards, which would insure a decent standard of life. General adoption of fair labor practices by all of the countries, it was agreed, would benefit international trade by eliminating much unequal competition.

A 48-hour week was set as the maximum with 44 hours recommended if possible; minimum wage standards were outlined and the abolition of child labor recommended.

A study was also recommended of the desirability of workers and employers going from one country to another to become acquainted with methods used elsewhere in their industries, thus promoting understanding and goodwill, said Miss Winslow.

The social insurance committee outlined detailed standards of legislation and recommended the appointment of committees to study areas available for colonization and means of handling problems of immigrants to whom these might be opened.

Miss Winslow, the only woman delegate sent by any Government, was chairman of the women's and juvenile committee and made her report to the conference in both Spanish and English.

The recommendations of her committee included those designed for the protection of women workers during pregnancy and following the birth of their children, legislation for which there is great need in South America, she learned from delegates from there, she said.

The committee also recommended equal pay for equal work; special women's bureaus to carry on a study as to equality of treatment; recommended prohibiting the dismissal of married women because of their marital status; abolition of home work industries, and that women should have freedom to organize for collective bargaining, to share in administration and operation of labor organizations and have the right to vote and hold office in their countries.

A resolution was passed that women should be appointed as delegates to the I. L. O. conferences when subjects concerning women were on the agenda. Although a similar one was adopted in Santiago, Chile, in 1936, the United States was the only country which had a women delegate, and Mexico and Cuba were the only others which had women advisers on their delegations.

Miss Winslow's report was adopted unanimously. The conference delegates, she said, although they kept their national requirements in mind, worked together with a view to the common good. They met as experts in their various fields rather than in national blocs, she said, making it possible to do effective work.

Miss Schneiderman spoke of her observations at the conference and the others who had attended spoke briefly.

20th Century Club Hears Talk On Democracy

Education in democracy must take in the total well-being of the individual members of the civics education section of the Twentieth Century Club were told yesterday by Dr. Karl E. Bigelow, director of the Commission on Teacher Education of the American Council of Education.

Mrs. Paul Everhardt, chairman of the section, presided at the meeting which was at the Y. W. C. A. "Democracy depends for its vitality upon fundamental attitudes, simple habits of action and profound convictions, rather than upon copy-book maxims or particular organizational forms," asserted Dr. Bigelow. "It follows that the school and college can make their greatest contribution to the maintenance of democracy by offering young people a continuous experience in democratic practice. No amount of precept will avail if personality is not respected, if human sympathy is not nurtured, if problems and conflicts are not habitually dealt with rationally."

"If the life of the school is of the character just suggested, then out of reflection upon experience, direct and vicarious, may grow convinced adherence to the principles of democracy."

"As democrats we ought not to be merely interested in intellectual growth; nothing less than the total well-being of young America should be the object of our sympathetic devotion."

Mary Haworth Tells of Work

Mary Haworth, columnist of "Mary Haworth's Mail" in The Post, last night addressed the dinner meeting of the Home Economics Association of Washington at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women.

She discussed the great variety of problems which come to her desk, covering all phases of human perplexity, and described her approach to their solution: "What you try as a columnist is to do to the best of your ability, is to solve problems by specific suggestions when possible; to relieve worry and to impart a philosophy of life that is at once optimistic, self-sustaining, on-going and up-reaching. You try to help people face facts realistically and to persuade them to live idealistically."

Being a problem columnist, she said, is wearing and may be a depressing occupation. It is impossible not to take the job seriously if one has a sense of noblesse oblige, she declared.

Miss Haworth was presented by Miss Florence L. Hall, chairman of the association's program committee.

White House Fete In Whirl of Parties

Marathon of Merriment Confronts Younger Groups, but There'll Be Fun for the Older Ones as Well

As someone remarked recently, "We oldersters are simply ignored in this Christmas rush." Of course, they were referring to the amazing whirl of parties planned for debutantes and sub-debs, while grown-ups are left to amuse themselves. Highlight of the hectic festivities will be a debutante luncheon party on December 29 at the White House.

It will be a veritable marathon for the youngsters, for not a day—no, not even Christmas—will be without a party or two or three. Starting the ball rolling will be the gala buffet supper next Wednesday aboard the yacht Firenze to be given by Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim. Honor guests for the occasion will be Debutante Patricia Froehnik and Sub-deb Joan Dodd. Miss Dodd, daughter of Mrs. J. J. Shouse, will arrive from St. Anne's School in Charlottesville Tuesday.

This will be a strictly younger party with some 30 young ladies and 25 boys attending. On Monday, the Guggenheims will entertain at a dinner party for their contemporaries. This will be in the nature of a farewell as they cast off Wednesday for Charleston, where they will spend a week or so quail hunting at the shooting box of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Guggenheim just outside of Charleston. They expect to be in Miami for New Year's Eve.

But back to the younger set. On Thursday of next week, Mrs. Harold Hinton will entertain at a tea. That same day, Mrs. Hamilton Fish will fete her daughter, Zevah, at a party. Rounding out the busy day will be Mrs. Lloyd Parker Shippen's subscription dance.

Luncheons, Teas And Dances Galore

The next day, Friday, will see the youngsters dashing madly from luncheon to teas to any number of dances. Miss Eleanor Neill will entertain a large group of sub-debs at a luncheon at the Chevy Chase Club. At a tea, to be given at the 1925 F Street Club, Miss Margaret Houghteling will be presented by her parents, the Commissioner of Immigration and Mrs. Lawrence Houghteling. Mrs. Arthur Krock will entertain at a dinner party that same evening preceding the committee dance to be held at the home of Mrs. Keith Merrill.

Mrs. Edward Finkenshaed will fete her daughter, Sila, at a tea on Saturday of next week. That evening, Mrs. Armistead Peters will entertain at a dance in honor of her daughter, Ann. Christmas Eve will find a jolly group of boys and girls gathered at Wolf Trap Farm for a mid-day picnic luncheon cooked over an outdoor fire. Mr. and Mrs. Shouse are hoping for snow, so that skis, bob sleds or the sleigh—which is complete with horse and bells—may be used. Hosts will be Miss Joan Dodd and young Bill Shouse, who will be home from Christ School in Asheville, N. C.

On Christmas is the debutante party of Miss Rosalyn Buchanan, who will be presented to society by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wesley Buchanan at their home on Bradley boulevard. The day after Christmas will find a number of youngsters attending the party Gen. and Mrs. Charles Drake will give in honor of Miss Sheila Broderick, daughter of Lady Broderick.

Two of the official debutantes, Miss Jean Browne Wallace and Miss Mary Margaret Jackson, will make things merry on December 27 in a double-debut at the Carlton Hotel. That evening, Mrs. Wesley Sturgis will fete her two sons, William and Douglas, at a dance. Also on tap that evening is Miss Minnie Hawks' annual dance.

Double Debut Due On December 27

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest G. Draper will entertain at a tea on December 28 to present Mr. Draper's daughter, Mary, to society. Mary will return soon from Vassar for the holiday festivities. That same day Mrs. John Caswell will honor her daughter, Peggy Lankdown, at a dinner party at the Chevy Chase Club. Also on the books for that day is Miss Joan McKenna's debut party.

Mrs. McNeill, wife of the McNeill of Barra, will entertain at a dance on December 30 for her son, Freddie Hicks. The next evening, New Year's Eve, a gay costume party is scheduled. Hosts will be Mr. and Mrs. Fernandez Cunitbert in honor of their two sons, Vittorio and Mario, and their daughter, Julia.

On New Year's Day, Miss Ann C. Bryan, daughter of Commander and Mrs. Hamilton Bryan, will entertain at a party. The holidays will be climaxed by the large dance Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings will give on January 2 in honor of Patricia Froehnik and Miss Helen Bruce, of Baltimore.

Several groups in Washington have heard Dr. Grant talk on the European situation, among them the Professional Writers Club, the international relations group, of the American Association of University Women; the Junior Board of Commerce and the Washington Kiwanis Club.

Early in January Dr. and Mrs. Grant will visit Alabama, where the Minister is scheduled to talk before several groups in Birmingham, at the University of Alabama, in Tuscaloosa, and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, at Auburn. ## Mrs. Cajigas Gives Party For Sra. de Rogelio Allfaro

Hostess Chalks Up Another in Long List
Of Successful Entertainments; Bride
Guest of Honor, but Others Share Spotlight

With a bride, Senora de Rogelio Allfaro, as honor guest and virtually every Latin-American Senora in Washington in attendance, Mrs. Tomas Cajigas chalked up another in her long list of successful parties yesterday afternoon.

Although the lively Lupe Allfaro was "official" guest of honor there were a number of other feted guests. The two pretty Herdicia girls, Carmen and Christina attended the party. They are daughters of the Nicaraguan Minister to London and Paris. Another bride, Senora de Fernandez, wife of the new Minister of Paraguay, was very much the center of attention. The new chateleine of the Paraguayan Legation is daughter of the president, Gen. Estigarribia, who before leaving for his homeland took over duties as chief executive served as minister here. Senora de Castro Beeche, wife of the Minister of Costa Rica who is retiring soon, was also among those honored.

Yesterday's party was one of a series to be given by Mrs. Cajigas, who plans to be "at home" to her friends the second Thursday of every month. On Christmas Eve, Dr. and Mrs. Cajigas will give their annual Noche Bueno—a typical Spanish celebration—from 5 until 9 o'clock.

Off From Studies In Time for Party

Mrs. Cajigas with Senora de Allfaro received before sheaves of palms and ferns. She wore a lavender brocade tea frock augmented by a cluster of orchids. Young Anita, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Cajigas, came in late in the afternoon from her studies at George Washington University. She assisted her mother, wearing a smart black dinner frock.

Christmas appointments enhanced the tea table where coffee, tea and chocolate were dispensed. A huge wreath, consisting of silver cones, bits of red and holly, centered the table where a bayberry candle gleamed. There were red candles on the table also, and red and white mints carried out the color scheme. The buffet consisted of hot biscuits with Virginia ham, cheese balls, chicken sandwiches and any number of sweets.

Senora de Allfaro acted as head of the tea table and those

Diplomats Leave White House and Protocol For Small, Gay Parties After Reception

NO SOONER was the White House reception ended last night than the diplomats tossed formality and protocol overboard and took themselves, their gold braid and medals, to one of several small and very gay parties given after the colorful, if slightly stiff, state function.

Although only about half-a-dozen nonofficials were asked to the diplomatic reception this year, at these suppers residential society still had a chance for a peek at the brilliant clothes worn by both men and women. Many went to Mrs. Truxton Beale's historic old brick home on Jackson place, Decatur House, where the candlelight flickered romantically over the rich satins and brocades, diamonds and emeralds of the ladies, and the glittering gold and brilliant ribbons of the men. Others gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell for a party which lasted well into the morning.

AT CASWELL'S the guests compared notes on the White House reception to the accompaniment of songs by Sid Cowen, while talented Burrus Williams played the grand piano in one corner of the living room. Wreaths of holly, lit by candles, shone in the windows, and vases of white lilies were enormously effective against the pale green walls.

The pretty dark-haired hostess looked Christmas-y herself in a stunning black taffeta dress with a wide fuchsia band across the bodice, ending in a perky bow. The skirt was yards and yards wide, and from the hem peeped a fuchsia taffeta petticoat. A corsage of white orchids tipped in red completed Betsy's costume.

The diplomatic guests were carefully selected from among the neutral or Allied nations so that there was no chance for tense moments. Some had to decline owing to the situation abroad. The Finnish Minister, handsome Hjalmar Procope, sent his regrets because of "Finnish business." The Polish envoy, Count Potocki, was busy with some refugee friends who have just come to town.

BUT PRESENT WERE: The Netherlands Minister and pretty Mme. Loudon, who, with her blonde hair and blue eyes, is always being taken for a "perfect Dutch type," though she is American; lovely Countess van Rechteren Limpurg, wearing her favorite white and sparkling tiara of diamonds... Mme. Espil, beautiful wife of the Argentine Ambassador, being praised for her lovely Molyneux gown of gray crepe, made along Empire lines, with a high waist line, tiny puffed sleeves, and a band of silver leaves around the square neckline. Two handsome diamond clips glittered at the shoulder.

The Rumanian Minister and Mme. Irimescu and the Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun sipped champagne and sampled the enormous cold turkey which had been smoked in sherry. "Ma" Williams, in her favorite black jet, helped herself from one of Mrs. Mark Bristol's famous hams, and from the casserole of chicken and mushrooms made from a secret recipe. Mrs. Warren DeLano Robbins was stunning in black satin, shimmering with a lustrous necklace of pearls. She was one of the few residents invited to the White House. Her late husband was a cousin of the President.

MR. AND MRS. F. Moran McCoskie were among the guests, having entertained at a dinner for the Caswells beforehand. George Ahell was accompanied by his houseguest, Sir Anthony Jenkinson, young Briton who has written a book about our country. Francesca McKenney, in white satin with a necklace of diamonds, pearls and aquamarines, Nancy Leiter and Mrs. Marshall Ernieles, in pale gray crepe trimmed with gold embroidery, were others among the dozens present.

ODDS AND ENDS: The former Undersecretary of the treasury and Mrs. T. Jefferson Coolidge will come from Boston to spend the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. David Finley, who will entertain at dinner in their honor tomorrow. The Secretary of the Netherlands Legation, A. F. H. van Troostenburg de Bruyn, has been transferred to Berlin, and will leave in January. The Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon will give a farewell party for them December 29, and are also planning a dinner for the night of January 3... Mrs. Henry Leonard will be hostess at a dinner on Saturday, December 23, at Grasslands, and has asked other people to drop in afterwards. The Counselor of the Netherlands Legation, Countess van Rechteren Limpurg have asked friends in for dinner before this party.

Mary Claxton To Visit Cousin Over Holidays

Among the attractive visitors who will be in Washington through the holidays is Miss Mary Payne Claxton, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. P. P. Claxton, of Clarksville and Nashville, Tenn., who will be the guest of her cousin, the former United States Minister to South Africa, Ralph Totten.

Miss Claxton's parents are well known in the Capital. Dr. Claxton is a former United States Commissioner of Education.

Pretty and charming, Miss Claxton is sure to be widely entertained here. Parties on her Washington calendar are already piling up. Mr. Totten and his mother will entertain at a cocktail party for her December 23. She will arrive here on Thursday, December 21, and will stay until December 30.
